HOW TO SEE

Sanely, Sensibly,

General Layout of Show (for detailed

If you are reading this while you are at the Show, you have obviously reached the bottom of the escalator, which is the lodestar, or the point from which you can guide your course through the Show. To establish yourself, see the sketch on this page. (You can also check the floorplan on pages 34 and 35.)

We suggest that you take a quick turn around the Show without too much planning, then head to one of the food service areas with your program. (The restaurants are on the perimeters of the Show; see description below or check floorplan, pages 34 and 35.) Sit down with a cup of coffee, study the floorplan, mark the "must see" exhibits and decide in which direction you want to go.

THE SHOW IS DIVIDED INTO THREE PARTS:

1. Major nursery, florist, educational exhibits and garden club gardens. Move forward from the escalator toward the marina.

You can circle the Show from the left or right. A description of each of these exhibits is included in the program, starting on page 15.

2. The competitive classes, plant societies and educational exhibits. Lectures and demonstrations at Horticultural Hall. At the bottom of the escalator turn around, as though facing the escalators. Move to the left or right. Here you will find the niches, rooms and tables, balconies, horticultural classes, pressed flowers, miniatures, plant societies and educational exhibits.

Horticultural Hall is adjacent to the International Cafe, in the rear of the exhibit area. See box for listing of times for lectures and demonstrations.

3. Trade Booths. Now that you've seen the Show you're probably itching to carry home some reminder that spring is not far behind. In this section you will find 127 trade booths filled with baskets, plants, flowers, tractors, bulbs, books and hundreds of other items.

To get there move forward in a straight line from the bottom of the escalator past the nursery exhibits. There are four entrances into the commercial section of the Show.

OTHER AREAS YOU WILL WANT TO KNOW ABOUT:

Restaurants. Three food service areas, a cocktail lounge and snack bars are located on the perimeter of the Show. Check the floorplan on pages 34 and 35. The symbols will help you locate these areas.

When you have completed your tour of the Show, you may want to visit some of Philadelphia's fine restaurants, listed in the Green Directory starting on page 38.

The Joys and Pains of Exhibiting in the Flower Show

by Elaine Rose

An early frost, an uncommonly warm day in February, a snuffed-out pilot light on the greenhouse heater or a highway salting crew might do it. If they don't, an overturned trailer on the expressway, a cloudy February or a stubborn rhododendron could. And if they don't, keep an eye out for the one species of bug that survived every possible insecticide in a given year.

Exhibiting in Philadelphia's favorite spring fling isn't as hard as it looks. It's harder. Especially when you consider what the 60 exhibitors whose displays create the plethora of blossoms, gardens and land-scapes put themselves through to be a part of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's annual event.

As the public rides the escalator down to the Civic Center main floor on that first day of the week-long Philadelphia Flower Show, there's not a spectator among them who doesn't marvel at the magic it takes to turn four and a half acres of cold, empty concrete floor into lush gardens, woods, and bags, complete with cascading waterfalls and even wildlife.

For a full week before opening day, tons of earth, props and flora are chiseled, draped and moulded into these fantastic scenes. But turn the calendar back to long before that week, a full year, just before the

But if you don't remember any rhododendrons gracing the charming outdoor patio scene, it's because the stubborn plants were still sitting defiantly without blossom in Steve's greenhouses when the Show opened.

1982 Show, to see when the foundations for this year's Show were laid.

It was then, six months before they cultivated their first cutting, when the nurserymen submitted their plans to designer Ed Lindemann for the 1983 Flower Show. By the time the judges placed ribbons on the winning displays for "Penn's Greene Countrie Towne" (last year's theme), the floorplan was complete and a new theme was established.

By midweek, the exhibitors knew their spots for the following year, and a few days later, as the week-old displays were torn down, the nurserymen brainstormed about how they would play their part in 1983's "Follow The Sun."

Even as the nurserymen pursue their busy spring and summer season, they take time to either tag the plants they plan to use in the next Show, if they have them in their nurseries, or to order the special plants they'll need. By fall, they have a clear idea of how their displays will take shape, getting inspiration from the Flower Show theme and from their own specific landscaping styles. Al Vick, owner of Vick's Wildgardens, Inc., in Gladwyne, is known for his naturalistic style.

"I get a lot of my ideas from scenes I see in the woods," says Al, who attended his first Flower Show when he was eight years old. He has been an exhibitor in every Show but one since 1930.

By mid-September, the participants submit their plans to the Show's design committee and gear up for the physical challenge of gathering the trees, shrubs and flowers for their displays. By Thanksgiving some of the display materials have already been moved into forcing greenhouses and the process of fooling Mother Nature begins.

forcing plants into bloom

Forcing plants and trees to blossom or leaf months before they would come to life naturally is the key to a successful exhibit. Unfortunately, it can also be the undoing of grand extravagant plans. For an experienced exhibitor, it's tricky. For a freshman, it's downright harrowing.

Steve Mostardi, general manager of Mostardi's Nursery and Greenhouses in Newtown Square, had his first experience as an exhibitor last year. Though his nursery has had a trade booth in the Show for five years, they had never attempted to fill an exhibit area.

"We wanted to show the public that we do landscape work," says Steve. The patio scene they created was similar to the jobs they do for their customers.

"Since this was our first try, we kept the plan simple," Steve explains. "We did an uncomplicated design using rhododendrons and azaleas."

"But there are no guide books for forcing plants," he continues. "We've done some forcing for holiday plants, but never on this scale and so completely out of season. It's unpredictable."

The Mostardi Nursery did have a lovely exhibit in last year's Show. It did feature azaleas. But if you don't remember any rhododendrons gracing the charming outdoor patio scene, it's because the stubborn plants were still sitting defiantly without blossom in Steve's greenhouses when the Show opened. Hollies took their place. Three weeks later, Steve sold the rhododendrons, all blooming beautifully, for Easter.

Steve's encounter with the unforceable flowers is an experience shared by every exhibitor, every year, no matter how many years they've done it. Nancy Ohliger, general manager of Whitemarsh Landscape, Inc. in Whitemarsh, who has managed the nursery's participation in the Show for five years, is painfully aware of what the delicate balance of light, temperature and water can mean to a properly forced flower. A log kept by the owner of that nursery, Stan Leighton, a familiar face on the Flower Show floor for the past 20 years, helps Nancy over some rough spots. Even that log can't solve some problems.

An early frost brought her up short two years ago.

"We didn't get some trees dug in time that year and the ground was frozen solid," she remembers. "We had to use jack hammers to get them out of the ground."

Of all the hazards faced by the exhibitors, failing greenhouse heaters are the most common dilemma. The nurserymen cope with different back-up systems; Steve installed an alarm that sounds in his bedroom if the greenhouse temperature dips; they may hire greenhouse sitters to watch the thermostat or, as Al has done many times, spend the night in the greenhouse standing vigil by the pilot light.

When watching and worrying about systems, endurance and brute strength might save the day, but overpowering nature with air hammers or alarm bells isn't effective against some pitfalls. During the critical months of December, January and February, when the nurserymen are cautiously coaxing the vibrant blossoms along, a strong heart is often the only defense.

the collapsing greenhouse

Nancy didn't panic the year the better part of her display materials were buried under several feet of snow when the greenhouse roof collapsed.

Al stayed calm when the winter salt from the highway drained along with the melted snow into the pond he uses to water his plants. Half his crop died before he discovered the culprit.

On another occasion, Al kept his composure when he determined that the reason the 500 maidenhair ferns he so carefully cultivated didn't force in time was because they hadn't had enough freezing, dormant time. "The just hadn't had enough sleep," he says.

Nancy survived the sad moment when she opened the greenhouse door one morning to find all the rhododendrons burned from too much heat. "They weren't coming on in time," she says, "so we cranked up the heat one night. That's all it took. Just one night."

Well-kept records of times and temperatures for forcing is a method used by several nurserymen to avoid disaster. But as Al says, that won't help if cloudy February keeps the sun from shining through the greenhouse roof or if the regimen of spraying the plants with a different insecticide every three weeks fails to kill just one particular pest. Al threw his journal away because "Mother Nature and the Lord above are the only ones who know what's really going to work."

And no journal in the country, no matter how meticulously updated, can help when the exhibitor is sitting on the expressway, in an idling panel truck filled to overflow with fragile bulbs, flowers and shrubs, in frigid temperatures, behind an overturned tractor trailer, just two miles from the Civic Center exit.

"We didn't get some trees dug in time that year and the ground was frozen solid. We had to use jack hammers to get them out of the ground."

With one comfortable exhibit under his belt, Steve Mostardi is ready for something a little more complicated this year. He discovered the willingness of his coexhibitors to help with information, moral support and even emergency plants if necessary. And he'll make good use of their goodwill.

Nancy is looking forward to showing something a bit more exotic this year in keeping with her desire to not only entertain the Show visitors but to educate them as well.

And Al, having grown three times the number of plants he'll be needing, as many nurserymen do for disaster insurance, will capture a sunlit scene from a forest glade and bring it to the Civic Center with his usual calm.

Exhibitors spend thousands to create their magic. The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society assists major commercial exhibitors with substantial subsidies. To the exhibitor the additional costs are worth it. The publicity and exposure to more than 200,000 spectators during this one week will provide most of them with potential customers. Sometimes a customer will ask an exhibitor to create the very scene he displayed at the Show.

And the camaraderie and dedication that meld together into this emotional event are almost as satisfying as the ribbons and prizes awarded for their efforts. For the participation in the Philadelphia Flower Show is well worth risking the 4,000 varieties of tragedy that can strike exhibitors at anytime throughout the year before their exhibits are unveiled.

The Competitive Classes:

In 1983 178 competitive classes are open to exhibitors.

These classes include arrangements in niches and on pedestals, in rooms and on tables; miniature arrangements and miniature rooms; pressed plant designs; gardens and balconies and horticultural classes that include terrariums, topiaries, specimen plants, woody and nonwoody plants, and all the easy and hard-to-grow plants that grow in the Delaware Valley area.

HERE IS A BREAKDOWN OF THE CLASSES OPEN TO ARRANGERS AND HORTICULTURISTS

Niches: Throughout the week skilled arrangers interpret an assigned subject within the confines of 19 niches: large, medium and small. The arrangements are planned in advance and are executed within a limited time, under the pressure of other close-by competitors and observers. Each day except Sunday most of the niches are changed. A schedule, which exhibitors receive months before the Show, spells out whether a particular class will include dried or fresh flowers or plants, and which accessories are permissible. See photo on page 9.

HOW TO ENTER COMPETITIVE CLASSES AT THE PHILADELPHIA FLOWER SHOW

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society mails an exhibitor's guide to competitors in July. If you are not a member and wish to receive a schedule, write to Flower Show Secretary, Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, 325 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, PA 19106.

Miniature Arrangement Class:

This new class, developed last year, proved so popular that it's been included again. The tiny dried arrangements do not exceed 5 inches in any direction. The class taps the arrangers' spatial perceptions and ingenuity and confirms that small is beautiful.

Pedestal Class: These arrangements are an outgrowth of the niche section but are handled in a free space and can soar or remain earthbound.

Room and Table Classes: It's a challenge to exhibitors to create a room or table setting and to let their designer's creative skills go, yet to be certain that the beautiful arrangements are the center of attention in these two classes. See photos on page 10.

Miniature Class: This class is one of the best loved of the competitive section. It calls into play design skills, craftsmanship to build the tiny models, and great powers of imagination to represent tomato patches with berries, trees with a single tiny plant, and mosses for lawns. The ingenuity is breathtaking. Join the long and happy line to get a glimpse of the world at a scale of one inch to one foot.

Designs for Pressed Plant Materials: Pressed plant designs can be a year-round job: collecting flowers and plants, pressing them and creating the picture. A design can incorporate 20 or 30 plants; four or five plants might be disassembled to create a plausible mutant. Tiny ferns might represent trees; mosses, a forest walk. The designs are a showcase for unlimited imagination.

Garden Class: Four garden clubs work through the year to plan, design and simulate the exhibit in their homes, basements or garages. These beautiful replicas of a section of a colorful garden are the result of many work hours on paper and with chalk, string and whatever else is necessary to bring the exhibits into fruition. The gardeners research to find plants compatible with the climate, light and soil of the Delaware Valley. During the year, models of the exhibits, along with plant lists, are checked by a volunteer and staff committee for appropriateness.

Balcony Class: This new class bows to the burgeoning interest in outdoor horticulture in the urban and suburban high-rises.

Horticultural Classes: In the past we've had as many as 1,400 entries from about 120 persons in this section of the Show. The scope of entries here is staggering, ranging from extremely difficult-to-grow rock garden plants, to menacing topiary tigers and sleepy unicorns, from miniature landscapes, to rare greenhouse plants. The classes include bulbs, terrariums, geraniums and lantanas; if you can grow it in the Delaware Valley, it's possible we'll have it on display.

Arrangers have the eye of the painter, The patience of the sculptor, The concentration of a surgeon, And the canniness of an entrepreneur.

Your assets should have the attention of Philadelphia's leading manager of personal trusts and estates.

At Girard, at the close of every business day, all trust income is reinvested, automatically, at high money market rates.

All of our trust customers receive the maximum return on their investments. At the end of every business day, we automatically reinvest the income and rash balances in every trust account at high money market rates. This assures that these funds are at work all of the time, earning interest, right down to the last dollar.

Givard was the first bank in this area to provide this important daily reinvestment service — a service that means the highest possible income for you and your family. With daily reinvestment, as opposed to monthly or even All of our trust customers as opposed to monthly or even quarterly that you'll find at most banks, Grard maximizes the op-portunities for your money to carn extra money.

This is just one of the wide variety of special financial services available to our trust customers. Providing such innovative services has nelped Girard grow to be the eighth fargest bank in the U.S. in managing personal trusts and estates. [The second bank in Philadelphia tanks no better than seventeenth.]

If your trust income is not being automatically reinvested every day, call us at (215) 585-2303

Across from the Philadelphia home of Mozart, Tchaikovsky, and Puccini, Hershey hospitality

Hershey hospitality is about to rise to its greatest heights.

"Bravo!"

The Hershey opens in March '83!

When you're moving in directly across from the Academy of Music, there's only one way to go about it.

With style.

And that's what we're bringing to Center City in our new Hershey Philadelphia Hotel.

This will be the one hotel that's refreshingly unconventional. The one where you're welcomed, not processed. The one where you're catered to, not tolerated.

It's a totally contemporary look and feel. Heightened by a warmth that could only come from Hershey.

HOME GROWN AND SHOWN

Ways to grow and display plants in the home: take away ideas to try in your own home.

ROSADE BONSAI STUDIO

RD 1, Ely Road New Hope, PA 18938 F. Chase Rosade & Lynn Porter, Co-Chairs

DEVELOPING BONSAI IN A QUIET GARDEN

Learn how to create a bonsai from an ordinary nursery plant. Both Chase Rosade and Lynn Porter will be working throughout the week making bonsais, answering questions and giving instructions. The setting for this "working display" is a dry garden using a few plants and the sparse placement of rocks and sand so each viewer has his own mental picture for a landscape. Some specimen bonsai will also be displayed in this meditative garden.

ROSE VALLEY NURSERY

684 S. New Middletown Road Media, PA 19063 Wayne R. Norton & Jack Blandy, Co-Chairs

A JAPANESE APPROACH TO NATURE

Take an imaginary trip to the Far East while viewing a Japanese style landscape that includes features such as an oriental building and a pool of water fed by a waterfall. The special attention given to the placement of the rocks and sloping of the ground throughout the landscape serves to draw together natural and architectural forms into a unified and harmonious composition.

ROSES INCORPORATED

P.O. Box J Kennett Square, PA 19348 Robert P. Thompson, Chair

SUNRISE - SUNSET

An educational display of the many varieties of roses available today. How to keep roses in the home; the best way to arrange and display roses for a long vase life and what varieties of greenhouse grown roses are presently available are some of the answers visitors will find in this exhibit.

W. B. SAUL HIGH SCHOOL

7100 Henry Avenue Philadelphia, PA 19128 Robert J. Hunter, Chair

SEASONS IN THE SUN

Thirty vocational horticulture students helped put together this educational exhibit, which is both theoretical and practical. Small peaches and trees, pears and blueberries are shown in bloom surrounded by a colorful collection of ornamental plants.

SNIPES FARM AND NURSERY

US Rt. 1, Lincoln Highway Morrisville, PA 19067 Robert W. Thomas, Chair

CAPE COD SUMMER

A blending of seasons and the proximity of varied ecologies are on display in a seashore setting. The short growing season brings spring and summer flowers into bloom at the same time. The wild seaside dunes contrast and protect the traditional cultivated Cape Cod garden.

J. FRANKLIN STYER NURSERY

KYOTO - PHILADELPHIA

Two gardens are shown here, the Court Garden and an Entrance Garden. Both are viewed from inside the home or office. Many of the traditions and designs of the Far East are used with additional color to appeal to the American taste. Restraint is maintained to give tranquility and peace of mind to the viewer.

SUN SPOT

A secluded sunny knoll, at one time planted and maintained quite formally, has been permitted to naturalize into the surrounding woodland. Various plant textures and forms become possible when contrasting sun and dense shade are available. The water and dense woodland produce a cool and serene environment.

WINTERTHUR MUSEUM AND GARDENS

Winterthur, DE 19735 Walter Petroll, Chair

WINTERTHUR IN BLOOM

This display highlights the favorite plants of Henry Francis duPont at Winterthur. The combination of woody, herbaceous, bulb plants, wildflowers, native and exotic shrubs add a touch of the old and new. "Antique" cultivars of plants demonstrate a subtle and masterful sense of color, texture, and form in the landscape.

A FLOWER IS WORTH A THOUSAND WORDS.

Better florists display this insignia proudly. It is your assurance of professional quality and service for all kinds of fresh flowers and green plants. Nearly 500 leading growers and wholesale and retail florists are members of Allied Florists — the only non-profit trade and educational association of its kind in the Delaware Valley. Make sure your florist is displaying this Allied Florist emblem.

Nothing is more fragile than an idea. Because it can start its existence as little more than a feeling. Or a casual observation. That's why Johnson & Higgins encourages its people to develop personal sensitivity to ideas. Especially by listening. So the other person's point of view can be absorbed and appreciated. In fact, we find that the harder we listen, the easier it is to come up with new ways to help our clients.

Thinking in a different dimension.

Our World Is Your Garden

Horticulture is a magazine about plants: how to find them, grow them, use them, and enjoy them. We deal with practically every aspect of gardening from tropicals to vegetables, soil improvement to garden design. Each topic is covered thoroughly and accurately, reflecting our notion that success with plants comes from understanding both their possibilities and their limitations.

To this end, every issue includes numerous illustrations that are both informative and handsome. The writing is lively and intelligent, providing advice without preaching. It is, in short, a magazine for expert gardeners and those who would become experts.

A subscription to Horticulture, The Magazine of American Gardening, costs $18 for 12 monthly issues, $30 for 24 issues. That's a modest price for the best in garden writing. As a gift for a beginning gardener, Horticulture might spell the difference between disenchantment and the development of a lifetime avocation. Looked at in those terms, it's a remarkably good value.

Please order now and enclose a check, money order, or the name, number, and expiration date of your Master Card, VISA, or American Express account. If you would prefer to be billed, please so indicate. Your first issue will arrive in about eight weeks. We do hope you subscribe.

With a native understanding of stone from the Italian foothills of the Alps, Pietro Marcolina and his six brothers ventured toward better opportunity in America. In 1918, within ten years of taking port in Philadelphia, they established Marcolina Brothers, Masonry Contractors. Centered in Chestnut Hill, Marcolina Brothers has helped form and restore the classic old world style of homes in the Main Line, Rydal and Jenkintown areas. Their specialized craft has been handed down through the century to sons and apprentices, and the proud, rich quality still exists in every stone they set.

WHO FLY IN THE FACE OF TRADITION.

Bonnie Tiburzi began to fly when she was 12,
got her pilot's license at 17,
and made history at 23.
Because at 23, Bonnie Tiburzi became the first woman pilot ever to fly for a major U.S. airline.
She did it by handling the problems of a traditionally male profession in a non-traditional way. She ignored them.
So if you're sitting on a runway one day, and you hear a woman's voice say
"Good morning, this is your Captain speaking," sit hack, relax, and join us in a toast to Bonnie Tiburzi.
With her favorite scotch:
Cutty Sark, of course.

Landscaping is both an art and a science. It takes an expert's ability to give you the results you want.

That's where you can count upon members of the Pennsylvania Nurserymen's Association. They have the experience, skill and knowledge you need for beautiful landscaping and gardening. Many have passed the association's comprehensive examination to qualify as Pennsylvania Accredited Nurserymen.

Attention to quality is the key to Mostarai's success. Most plants are grown here in our own green-houses to ensure the health and quality of each plant. As a result, Mostarai's features one of the area's largest assortments of flowering hanging baskets during spring and summer, as well as your favorite perennials, vegetable plants, garden mums and more.

Mostardi's offers a full selection of only the finest in brand name garden supplies, fertilizers and other products. Our Garden Shop features a distinctive array of pottery, baskets and decorative plant accessories to enhance the beauty of your plant decor both indoors and out. Remember, Mostardi's staff is always ready to help you achieve the best results from everything we sell.

Beautiful plantings begin with the expert advice of Mostardi's professional horticulturists. We'll show you the way to become a "bloomin' success" by helping you select the right plants for your home landscaping needs. Choose from our large selection of healthy, quality shrubs, trees, roses and groundcovers... all ready to grow and to beautify your home.

...has been our tradition for nine decades. Back then our work was done by hand, wheelbarrows or mule. And Star Roses were greenhouse grown from cuttings instead of outdoors on today's hardy, vigorous rootstocks.

Today we are abreast of the times—innovating many practices and methods—and automating wherever possible. With all the modern methods we still rely on many "green fingers" and the constant, personal care which bring you Star Roses and other Star Quality plants your parents and grand-parents only dreamed about.

When we began growing and selling other hardy ornamental plants our goal stayed the same—to give you the best quality for your money.

And when it comes to the introduction of new and exciting kinds of roses and hardy ornamentals, we are guided by the same goals and beliefs. From the world's most popular rose, Peace, to one of the most stunning of the newer roses, PARADISETM (variety: Wezeip), to a whole new world of hollies, the hardy Blue Hollies, we have done our best to bring you the best.

Welcome to the 1984 Philadelphia Flower Show

Welcome to the Orient

The 1984 Philadelphia Flower Show has followed the sun to the Far East, to the rising sun. The great wealth of horticulture from the orient has left its mark in our cities, suburbs, countryside and forests. A stunning number of plants that have become standbys in this country have their origins in the orient. With this Show, we emphasize not only spring but also our Far Eastern heritage and point up the possibilities for the cross-fertilization of cultures and ideas.

Our exhibitors have delved deeply into this horti-cultural exchange and have found the oriental study of nature is inextricably linked with philosophy, religion and art. Many of our exhibitors have been intrigued and charmed by the etiquette of Japanese flower arranging that invites the visitor to study and comment on every facet of the arrangement. Other exhibitors have discerned and worked with the distinctions between Western and Far Eastern gardening; the former, which "adds to" and the latter, which "reduces" to essentials.

We hope we have achieved an enriching blend of spring and the orient and that you, our visitors, will experience the harmony the calm and the sensual that is here. We hope this Show will add a new way of "seeing" for all plant lovers who visit us this year.

Again, welcome.

THE COMPETITIVE CLASSES AT THE FLOWER SHOW

In 1984: 244 competitive classes are open to exhibitors

Competitive about flowers? Competitive plant growers?

You bet your calla fily Points for a blue ribbon to a gorgeous mass arrangement or a tiny draba are a little different than points for 11 men brave and true, tussling on a field over a bit of pigskin. But the grit and determination, the gleam in the eye is often the same. The added incentive for entering the horticultural fray is that exhibitors learn from one another: they learn a lot. Lifelong friendships are made; many of the same people return from year to year, and they bring along the novice exhibitors.

Last year 374 individuals and 8 clubs made more than 1,700 entries in the competitive class sections of the Show. The competitive classes are divided into the artistic and the horticultural sections. Some classes, such as the niches, an arrangement class in the artistic section, change almost daily, and others like the club gardens and the pressed plant designs are in place all week.

How to Enter the Competitive Classes at the Philadelphia Flower Show.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society mails an exhibitor's guide to competitors in July. If you are not a Society member and wish to receive a schedule, write to Flower Show Secretary, Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, 325 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 19106.

The Garden Workers entry won a first in the 1983 Show

Niches: Flower arrangers work in large, medium and small three-sided niches that frame their arrangements. Arrangers work in these spaces each morning between 7:30 and 9:30 under strict rules of competition. Fresh cut flowers are required unless otherwise stated in the schedule, e.g. dried arrangements. Exhibitors may have ordered and received plants from as far away as Africa, Holland or California for their arrangements. The mechanics holding the arrangement together must not show; an exhibitor will lose valuable points if they do. Never has a niche gone empty during a show. If an act of God intervenes (and that's the only time someone will be missing), willing and resourceful exhibitors complete their own arrangements and start on their new challenge. Once time is called, an arranger may not touch the design, even if it falls, until after it is judged. With two exceptions, all niches will be changed daily during the Show.

Horticultural Classes: During the week approximately 1,500 plants will be exhibited in 208 classes in this section. The technology of growing them ranges from expensive greenhouses, to elaborate indoor lighting systems to windowsills. The skill, too, ranges from expert to the newly committed. And, the plants often reflect the temperament of their exhibitors: an elaborate orchid case, a witty unicorn topiary, an elegant landscape or a plain ivy:

One cannot know just by looking what's involved in growing plants; for example, a few of the tiny rock garden plants are extremely rare and difficult to grow, whereas some of the large, resplendent blooms are relatively easy. The entries in these classes are changed three times during the Show. One of the benefits of exhibiting in this section is you generally come out with more knowledge than you went in with.

No matter how often you swing around these little islands of plants, there's always something new to see, something you missed the last time around.

Miniatures: Only the ingenious, imaginative, patient and resourceful exhibit in this section, where Lilliputian scenes worthy of Broadway are created. Complete gardens, shops or old mills are done in miniature (scale: one inch equals one foot), and clever replicas of plants are fashioned using live plants. A tiny group of berries may turn up representing a stand of tomatoes, or juniper slips or boxwood might represent an ancient tree. Join the continuous throng for this exhibit.

Pedestals: Flower arrangements, free standing, in the round or with only a backing. Unfettered spirits tackle the sculptural arrangements that might soar as high as four feet.

Rooms: Exhibitors show how an arrangement can interpret the essence or ambiance of a space and accessories. The room in this year's Show, Shangri-la, is meant to convey a place found in our dreams.

Tables: This year the table section is a challenge class. Each exhibitor is given a sheet of plywood 4ft. × 8ft. that can be changed in any way they choose. The focus of the exhibit, however, is the table arrangement, which will interpret "the shape of things."

Balcony Class: City and suburban homes are expanding vertically into high rises with that extra room reaching into outer space. Exhibitors show how many inspired gardeners create gardens in space with containers and other inventive devices.

Garden Classes: The gardens you see at the Show have been through several lives. A club project, they have been designed on paper, built in architectural models, mocked up in their present forms in basements and on living room floors. Through the year, lists have been drawn up and revised, plants researched, brooded over, discarded and accepted. The people who created these gardens have learned things about landscaping they never thought possible. And we are all the beneficiaries of their know-how:

Designs for Pressed Plant Material: A class for people who are imaginative and patient. Designers create orangutans from bits of japanese maple, a child's head from clover, a skirt from hydrangea leaves and eyes from forget-me-nots. A steady hand is required to disassemble blossoms from flowers large and small and to reassemble them into landscapes, household interiors, sentimental pictures, lampshades or elegant screens.

WHAT IT TAKES TO WIN THE GRAND SWEEPSTAKES TROPHY

By the book it looks deceptively easy to win the Grand Sweepstakes trophy:

"[it] goes to the individual who accumulates the greatest number of points in all competitive sections of the Show: artistic and horticultural."

Points are awarded for each preregistered entry as well as for every first, second, third and honorable mention ribbon given to an exhibitor. And there must be a minimum of three entries in the artistic and a minimum of three entries in the horticultural classes.

The key to the Grand Sweepstakes is mastery in both the artistic and the horticultural classes. To range between these two sections of the Show an exhibitor needs the determination of a rugby player, the steeliness of a surgeon, the eye of an artist and the fussiness of a princes nanny.

Last year's winner was Rosemarie Vassalluzzo. Rosemarie has all of the traits listed above. She is also a dedicated horticulturist and enjoys participating. In the 1983 Show she made more than 80 entries: five were in the artistic section (three niches and two pressed plant designs) and the rest were in the horticultural classes. She won 32 ribbons: 8 firsts. 11 seconds. 6 thirds and 7 honorable mentions. When the combined artistic and horticultural points were tallied, Rosemarie had toted up 275 points to win the Grand Sweepstakes. The runner up, Joanne Marano had 104 points.

Small is beautiful This exquisite recreation of a formal, elegant room in the miniature class is 12½ in X 22 in X 22 in The miniatures are part of the artistic classes Separate Sweepstakes winners were also named among those competing in either the artistic or horticulture sections. Robin Lippincott won the Arrangement Sweepstakes, and Sylvia Lin walked away handily with the Horticultural Sweepstakes having earned an awesome 795 points; the runner-up, Margaret Bowditch netted 463 points.

Entering the horticultural section of the Show takes long range planning, sometimes as far ahead as a year. Many of the plants Vassalluzzo entered in the horticultural section were bulbs. All were grown in a cold frame and gradually transferred to the garage, then to the basement under lights and finally, two weeks before the Show, they were moved to the plant room. Vassalluzzo also likes clivia and planning to have it in bloom around March 8 took some computer-like calculations since it normally blooms for her in November. December and April. It bloomed at exactly the right time and won a blue ribbon.

Logistics is a tough part of the game when you are making a lot of entries. Exhibitors groom plants for the next day's entry late into the night. They cannot load the car the night before for fear of a freeze, so it's up at 4:30 in the morning to load up (carefully) and to get on the road by 5:30 a.m. Some exhibitors do this three times a week in the horticultural section, if they are entering on the three possible days. After all they can earn extra points for entering on Friday. The extra points are to encourage the numbingly tired enthusiasts to have fresh plants ready for the end of the Show. Then, if you are demonstrating your versatility, you may have as many as seven entry days to choose from for your artistic entries.

To be a Grand Sweepstakes winner is a tremendous honor; you are up against the very best in horticulture and in arranging. You may not have as many blues (firsts) as the Sweepstakes winner in each section, but you have the knowledge that you've been able to take the risks in both sections and to go for it. The pressure, the worry, the exhaustion all disappear when the announcement is made: "You are the winner among winners."

A large niche entry, "New Horizons" interprets a Georgia O'Keefe painting. Betty Bates and Susan Essick use calla lilies and ti-leaves for the colorful creation.

PLANTS FROM THE ORIENT

by Anne S. Cunningham

Plants and gardening techniques from the orient have long found fertile ground for acceptance in the Delaware Valley. Anne Cunningham explains how some of these plants got to this country and how the Show exhibitors are using the Asian transplants to open our eyes to even greater possibilities for use in our own gardens.

The Delaware Valley's horticultural debt to the orient is enormous. Most of our hardy shrubs and trees with conspicuous spring blossoms are natives of the orient: forsythia, magnolia, and wisteria are harbingers of spring, along with cherry, pear, crabapple, lilac, and quince. Oriental transplants we often take for granted include pachysandra, tea roses, primroses, even chrysanthemums.

Parts of Japan, eastern temperate China, and Korea have climates comparable to that of the northeastern United States, which has led travelers to compare them as the two areas of the world with the most brilliant fall color. Small wonder, since many of the most impressive trees of autumn, red-leaf maples and clear yellow-leaf birch, are of oriental origin.

Eastern Asia has long been a Utopia for those seeking plants. As early as the first century A.D. Buddhist monks and marauding warriors recognized the medicinal and economic value in the orient's orange, lemon, grapefruit, almond, peach, apricot, and rhubarb. During the Middle Ages, explorers like Vasco de Gama and Marco Polo were instructed to return with "medicines of vegetable origin" and ship's surgeons aided the proliferation by collecting dried specimens and seeds to cultivate at home.

Professional Plant Hunters

In the nineteenth century, plant hunters were professionals financed by governments, by private enterprise and educational institutions, or occasionally by wealthy amateur gardeners. Plant hunters ventured into the orient for years at a time, and time was their biggest enemy. It could take many months to reach a collection site, but if the botanist discovered a beautiful flower in spring, he would have to wait until fall to return and harvest the seed. Often he was unable to locate the same plant or it would be past its prime and the hunter would have to wait another full year. If a botanist tried to send a whole plant back to his sponsor, the plant was usually at the mercy of insensitive caretakers for the duration of the voyage. Even if the plants or seeds reached their destination, subsequent carelessness, indifference, or insufficient propagation knowledge could be fatal. Early plant hunters had little chance to see their discoveries come to popular use, for it frequently took 25 years, depending upon the ease of cultivation, for a new plant to become widespread.

Perhaps the most well-known plant hunter in the orient is Arnold Arboretum's Ernest "Chinese" Wilson, who explored from 1899-1922. His pride in discovery was somewhere between scholarly and lyrical. Each new specimen Wilson declared better than the one before, but

Rock slides have long heen one of the problems plant hunters experience in remote areas. Even present day plant hunters and their team in China must clear rocks from the road with hand tools, haskets and levers his favorite discovery was the Regal Lily. After being nearly trampled to death by a pack of wild mules and caught in a rockslide, Wilson endured a broken leg to secure the lily bulbs. He bought the digging rights from Chinese peasants, made sure each bulb was encased in clay, packed the clay molds in wooden boxes filled with charcoal and shipped the entire lot as silk to ensure its safe transport. Truly the work of a loving father.

When Wilson ventured from China to Korea, he noted the proliferation of native scrub pine (Pinus densiflora) and declares the rest of the country to be 'taken over' by coarse grasses, birch and larch. "Korea's greatest contribution," he writes "is the clove-scented Viburnum carlesii."

The Japanese islands cover approximately the same temperature range and distance as from Nova Scotia to the Florida Keys. Absence of lime in the soil is favorable to the development of rhododendron and blueberries, part of the Ericaceae family. Azaleas flourish, and the Enkianthus campanulatus introduced by Wilson is hardy in the Delaware Valley. He firmly states "the most valuable gift Japan has made to the gardens of the colder parts of North America" is the Taxus cuspidata, the japanese yew ground cover.

Today's Plant Hunter

While the plant hunters of the past brought back flowers and trees because they were new; plant hunting today has evolved with different goals: looking for ever hardier plants that will thrive at colder temperatures, varieties that have high salt tolerance or can survive neglect, abuse, pollution, drought, or standing water conditions. These modern day plant hunters have had great success rediscovering trees and plants suitable for an urban environment, like the Sophora japonica (japanese scholar tree), used prominently in the Society Hill area of Philadelphia partially because it can stand up well to traffic damage. Part of the new plant hunter's job is education: introducing rare plants, and reeducation: showing the public how they can better use the plants already commonly available.

Paul Meyer, Morris Arboretum's 31 year old assistant director and plant curator, is an enthusiastic, knowledgeable plant hunter who favors the educational line. He goes to the orient to find plants that are "not new to science, but are relatively unknown to cultivation and to western gardeners. "It's important to enrich our diversity of plantings," he stresses, "so that blights or plagues don't wipe out entire vistas. We look for trees to solve problems, for example a coastal tree to plant along highways where it can tolerate salt conditions." In 1981, Meyer returned from China and Korea with valuable finds, such as varieties of birch: Betula utilis with smooth brown bark, and Betula ermanii reputed to be resistant to the bronze birch borer, which plagues many birches in the northeastern U.S. He writes enthusiastically of bright blue fruits on the Gaultheria bookeri, "a low shrub only two feet high, which might make a fine-textured ground cover or dwarf shrub for confined areas."

Comparisons between the life of a plant hunter a hundred years ago and one today amuse Paul Meyer. Certainly today's botanists can get to China more quickly than their predecessors, but beyond the modern city limits, life remains much as it has been for centuries. It took Meyer four days on country roads, including delays caused by a rockslide, to get from the capital of Sichuan Province to the collection site. Meyer's group arrived with a minibus, a jeep and a supply truck. His predecessors had no motor vehicles but had retinues of as many as 40 men to set up camp, do the cooking and washing, collect botanical specimens, and to fend off bandits. Ernest Wilson did most of his traveling sitting in a sedan chair carried by four men. Paul Meyer smiles at the image, and shows a picture of his tent with plants, seeds, and laundry laid out to dry together. Wilson spent years; Meyer was allowed only eight days in Mt. Minya Konka, China, before he had to move on.

In Wilson's time, foreign plant hunters were basically ignored. Today China, Japan, and Korea have their own botanists who are not always pleased to see the knowledgeable westerner swooping in to collect their native plants. "The Chinese government puts the American government to shame in the amount of money put into plant studies" says Meyer. "They're about to publish a comprehensive 120 volume study of the flora of China." And that same government kept Meyer's dried & pressed plant specimens for more than 18 months before they would let the material leave the country. China wanted her own botanists to study the lot first.

Plants Used in the Major Flower Show Exhibits

The major exhibitors in this year's Philadelphia Flower Show have a wealth of plants and gardening techniques from the orient with which to develop their themes.

Winterthur's expert Hal Bruce says "We wouldn't recognize the American garden today without its oriental influence." Winterthur's exhibit shows common and uncommon plant treasures of China, Japan, and Korea in a naturalistic setting. The impressive all-white collection of Spiraea includes thunbergii (an early white), S. trilobata 'Swan Lake', S. cantoniensis, and S. japonica. The Exochorda, pearl bush, blooms in early spring with small white flowers resembling strings of pearls. These are offset by the yellow of the coreopsis and forsythia bushes.

The paulownia tree might be considered Winterthur's tour de force. This empress tree transplanted so well from the orient, it has been able to naturalize itself from the Delaware Valley down through the majority of southern states. Unfortunately, the paulownia's almost pure white wood makes it a valuable commodity in China where it's used to make bridal chests. As a result, many of our local paulownias, with their 2 ft. leaves and 18 in. bloom spikes, have been vandalized and sold back to China, but a most impressive one remains in Logan Circle. Liriope, astilbe, hosta, the chinese sacred lily, and plumbago add color and texture to the exhibit. One of their most prized flowers is the difficult to grow candelabra primrose.

Morris Arboretum's educational exhibit strives to use only plants that are native to the orient, avoiding subsequent hybrids and cultivars. Zelkova serrata, for example, is in the elm family and is frequently used by nurserymen in place of the american elm. It is more resistant to diseases and insects than the american elm; it is drought tolerant, grows as tall as an elm, is a good shade tree, and has good fall color. The flowering crab in the display, Malus floribunda, is another durable disease resistant native of the orient.

The Philadelphia Zoological Society's exhibit is centered around Korea, "the last great frontier," according to the Zoo's horticulturist Chuck Rogers. "We're emphasizing their great treasure troves of plants, like Buxus microphylla koreana, a compact low ground cover that's not grown as much as it should be. In the Zoo, it is great and quite sturdy, except when the children jump in it to see how it feels."

Prumus sargentii, an early single cherry, and three azaleas: R. schlippenbachii, R. mucronulatum (a deciduous early bloomer), and R. canescens (evergreen) are some of the colorful native plants on display. The Pinus koreana appears similar to Pinus rigida. Liriope, Viburnum carlesii, and Korean ferns are popular, hardy transplants.

At Longwood Gardens
the empress tree, Paulownia tomentosa, reaches a height of 50 ft. Its lavender blossoms appear in May on leafless branches, echoing the colors of lilacs in the Sundial
Garden and the mauve redbud and azaleas nearby.

J. Franklin Styer Nursery's exhibit, located directly at the end of the exhibit hall, creates an impressive "view of Mt. Fuji" as visitors come down the escalator. The foothills approach rises 20 ft. above the floor, incorporating a mountain stream flowing to a pond, a footbridge spanning the water, and a footpath to a small pagoda. Plants from various oriental locations are freatured for their adaptability in the Delaware Valley, not just those native to Japan.

The Japanese flowering cherries familiar to Washington D.C. visitors, are Prunus serrulata Mt. Fuji and Kwanzan; flowering crabs are floribunda, 'Malus Radiant', and 'Malus Bob White.' Styrax japonicus, Sophora japonica and Cornus kousa are popular and hardy in the Delaware Valley. There are several varieties of Japanese maple, notably 'Mioun' and 'Burgundy Lace.'

Consistent with the theme is the prolific use of ground covers, introducing some plants the public might not immediately associate with this category: liriope, miscanthus grasses, Skimmia japonica, Juniperus procumbens, japanese ferns, and japanese iris. Bamboo augments the naturalistic effect.

Rose Valley Nursery strives to convey the Japanese attitude toward gardening. "Westerners are a hurry-up people," says Rose Valley co-owner Wayne Norton, "but the Japanese have a calm, relaxed attitude in their gardens that we're trying to convey. We use color and texture to evoke mood." The birches, Betula pendula and Betula platyphylla japonica reflect the nature-in-miniature concept. Day lilies and hosta provide blues and whites; pink, yellow and peach flowers on the bank are offset by the grevs like artemesia.

Hybrids and cultivars of the original oriental plants are used throughout. One of the most noteworthy is the flowering cherry, Prunus serrulata. This has double flowers but develops no fruit, so there is no mess, one of the chief complaints about cherry trees. Dwarf azaleas include nakaharai hybrids and the recently popular North Tisbury group.

Bamboo is used to illustrate its usefulness to gardeners in the Delaware Valley because. according to Norton, "it grows anywhere, is drought and salt tolerant, and looks good ten months of the year." Dwarf bamboos, Sasa pygmaea, are appearing in home landscapes more than ever before.

The 1984 Philadelphia Flower Show is a fitting tribute to the many horticultural treasures from the orient in our landscape. In addition to plants, the oriental influence on gardening styles is increasingly evident throughout the Delaware Valley. As large estates continue to be broken up, people have less property and no gardener to care for copious English flower gardens. There is an expressed desire for low maintenance gardening, and a greater tendency toward Japanese landscape-in-miniature techniques such as mounding, rocks, weeping trees, dwarf shrubs and bushes, evergreen ground covers, perennials, pools of water and stone steps. The Delaware Valley is fortunate to have the right climate and so many knowledgeable horticulturists making the best use of the plant treasures from the orient.

The Poncirus trifoliata is an orange plant from the Orient, bardy in the Delaware Valley. The small bitter fruit stay on the shrub in the fall, and its tangled branches are favorable for bird nests.

Oriental woody plants hardy in the Delaware Valley

This selection is based upon merit in urban and suburban landscaping, rather than because the plants are rare or difficult to grow. Many thanks to Gary Koller, managing horticulturist at the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University, for his recommendations.

Acer griseum, maple: coral red fall color, unusual papery cinnamon brown bark.

A. japonicum: small stature, beautiful fall color.

A. palmatum: grows easily in Delaware Valley.

Ailanthus altissima, tree of heaven: considered a weed, grows freely in northeastern US, but has tremendous tolerance to urban and industrial pollution, often growing where nothing else can live.

Albizia julibrissin, silk tree or mimosa: grows rapidly under any soil conditions.

Azaleas (See Rhododendron)

Berberis julianae, wintergreen barberry: beautiful evergreen foliage year around, yellow flowers.

B. verruculosa: evergreen, low, dense, compact.

Betula japonica, birch: admired for its white bark. Resistant to birch Castanea mollissima, chinese chestnut: more resistant to chestnut blight than others.

Chamaecyparis pisifera, cypress: valuable as a species because it can fit almost anywhere. Could be a tough urban tree, but is currently being misused in home landscaping, planted too close to structures where it has to be

C. obtusa, hinoki: evergreen, billowing appearance.

Cornus kousa, chinese dogwood: abundunt white flowers. C. mas: very early to bloom—yellow flowers in April.

Cotinus coggygria, smoketree: visually interesting with green to purple leaf variations and 'tufts of smoke' effect.

Cotoneaster salicifolius: rapidly spreading evergreen forms a dense carpet. Small, narrow leaves create fine texture.

Cryptomeria japonica: one of the most salt-tolerant of all trees, good along highways or in coastal plantings.

Davidia involucrata, dovetree: rare and unusual tree with six inch white flowers in May Enkianthus campanulatus: bell-shaped flowers, yellow with red veins in May, brilliant autumn color. Popular ornamental tree for lightly shaded woodland.

Forsythia spp.: provides a problem-free flowering border or screen. European forsythia flowers at the same time, but chinese forsythia are brightest.

Ginkgo biloba: resistant to smoke, dust, wind, and ice. Male trees don't have the foul-smelling fruit.

Hamamelis japonica, witch hazel: impressive in spring landscape. H. mollis: particularly good aroma.

Hibiscus syriacus, rose-mallow:

H. 'Diana': new from the National Arboretum, clear white flowers with the chromosome number altered to eliminate seeds.

Hydrangea petiolaris: (climbing), tall self-clinging vine.

H. paniculata: flowers all summer.

Ilex crenata, holly: valued for diversity of varieties well suited to landscaping.

I. pedunculosa: bright red berries.

Juniperus chinensis: fast-growing, gray-green foliage. Tolerant of aerial salt spray, heat, drought, and urban conditions.

J. conferta: dense, prostrate blue-green juniper thrives in harsh shore conditions or poor, sandy soil.

Ligustrum spp., privet: one of the orient's most popular exports. Lonicera japonica, honeysuckle: flowers June-September.

L. maackii: dark red fruit.

Magnolia denudata: abundant large white flowers in April; honeybrown fall foliage.

M. stellata: fragrant, semi-double white flowers.

Malus hupehensis, crabapple: excellent espalier plant.

M. sargentii: popular dwarf with masses of white flowers and fruit lasting well into winter.

Metasequoia glyptostroboides, dawn redwood: rapidly-growing, pyramidal, deciduous conifer with beautiful fern-like foliage.

Paulownia tomentosa, empress tree: showy violet flowers and large leaves. Naturalizes easily.

Phellodendron amurense, amur corktree: rapid-growing, interesting cork bark. Adaptable to extremes of soil and pH; very tolerant of city conditions and pollutants.

Pieris japonica, japanese andromeda: one of the finest broadleaf evergreen shrubs.

Pinus bungeana, lace bark: beautiful bark.

P. densiflora, japanese red pine.

P parviflora, irregular japanese white pine.

P. thunbergii, japanese black pine: dark green, extremely tolerant of salt conditions and spray.

Polygonum spp.: strong vine with summer and fall white flowers. Poncirus trifoliata: hardy orange tree with small fruit. Tangled branches favorable for bird nests.

Prunus maackii, cherry: racemose cherry.

P. sargentii: exceptionally hardy; flowers very early.

P. subbirtella: unusual semi-double pink flowers bloom in spring; some may bloom in autumn.

P. serrulata: double flowers, no fruit so no mess.

P. yedoensis: single white or pink flowers; one of Washington D.C's famous varieties.

Pyrus calleryana, Bradford pear: masses of white flowers, brilliant fall color, but overused.

Rhododendron kaempferi: often deciduous, flowers red to pink.

R. keiskei: low with lemon-yellow flowers.

R. poukhanense: deciduous or semi-evergreen; fragrant flowers rose-lilac spotted with purple.

R. Schlippenbachii: deciduous; fragrant pink flowers.

Rosa multiflora, Japanese rose: weed-like growth, popular for hedges, and screens. Very fragrant.

R. rugosa: fruit and pink flowers June-September, very strong seaside plant, highly salt tolerant.

Sciadopitys verticillata, japanese umbrella-pine: extremely durable under difficult growing conditions. Formal in youth; more graceful with age.

Sophora japonica, scholar tree: also called pagoda tree. Excellent street tree, tolerant of abuse, drought, and poor soil.

Spiraea japonica: small, for bedding or rock garden.

S. prunifolia: true bridalwreath.

S. thunbergii: white flowers, too, but twiggy.

Stewartia koreana: hardy with showy white flowers.

Styrax japonicus, Japanese snowbell: fragrant white flowers. Ideal tree to combine with azalea, kalmia, and rhododendron.

Syringa amurensis japonica, lilac: adaptable and pest-resistant.

Taxus cuspidata, yew: very hardy and popular.

Tilia tomentosa, silver linden: smooth gray bark in youth, fragrant creamy yellow flowers on this worthy ornamental.

Ulmus parvifolia, chinese elm: highly resistant to dutch elm disease. Partially evergreen in mild climates, blooming in late summer or early fall.

Viburnum: all highly adaptable with autumn and winter fruits.

V. dilatatum: white flowers in May and June, showy scarlet berries persisting late.

V. rhytidophyllum, leatherleaf: excellent broadleaf evergreen, thrives under trees. Yellow flowers; fruit starts red, turns black.

V. sargentii: popular and very hardy.

V. urightii: hardy in the Delaware Valley.

Vitex negundo: good shore plant with flowers

Weigela rosea florida, pink weigela: strong grower, good foliage, pink flowers.

Wisteria floribunda: purple flowers, best for trellises.

W. sinensis: blue-violet flowers.

Zelkova serrata: foliage comparable to the american elm, but less susceptible to dutch elm disease. Drought and wind tolerant; pH adaptable.

YOU'RE AMONG FRIENDS at the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society

producer of the Philadelphia Flower Show

The Philadelphia Flower Show was put together by nurserymen, florists, designers, corporate executives, mothers, fathers, paid workers and volunteers. What they all have in common is pleasure in the magic of plants; their goal was to transform $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres of concrete into an amazing landscape. Creating this Show is only one of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's activities throughout the year.

People Involvement

is the highest priority at the Society. Here are some of the wavs we get together.

Shows: Last year thousands of people joined us in working on the Flower Show, Harvest Show, Christmas Show, the Junior Show and other exhibits.

City Gardening Contest: More than 600 judges (most of them members of the Society), formed into teams of four to judge more than 550 gardens throughout the city.

Lectures, classes, symposia and workshops: 36 last year including sessions in arranging flowers, making baskets from vines, landscape design, vegetable gardening and growing plants in containers. Our spring list includes perennial garden visits and workshops, workshops in pruning, propagation and landscape design, to name a few:

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society is about people and plants.

Garden Visits and Field Trips: 21 visits to many private and public gardens. One visit last year was as far away as Scotland, another to Maine, but many were only a comfortable, friendly bus ride away.

Library: One of the largest horticultural libraries in the area. Books ranging from the 16th century to those hot off the presses. A large periodical collection.

Hotline: A horticultural hotline (922-8043) for those gardening problems; what's bugging my tree, where can I buy ladybugs, and why won't my cat leave my spider plant alone.

Community Gardens: PHS's Philadelphia Green staff has worked with thousands of city dwellers, helping them to organize beautiful and productive city gardens on lots that were once trash-strewn. With some assistance, the neighbors have built vegetable and sitting gardens, window boxes, street trees and a wide variety of container gardens. Over the past two years Philadelpia Green launched The Greene Countrie Towne Project linking two major neighborhood gardening networks: one 88 blocks and the other 8 blocks. More "townes" will be added.

Publications: PHS's monthly newsletter will keep you up to date on what's happening at head-quarters, and Green Scene, our bimonthly magazine, will keep you up to date on what's happening in the garden. It lets you know what to grow, where, when and how:

Tickets: Members receive free tickets to the Flower Show and Harvest Show. They are invited to the Christmas Candelight tour and other periodic events.

Gardening: We have a small group of volunteers that meets once a week during the spring, summer and fall to plant, weed and harvest at our Society Hill Garden. The Group has high standards and lots of fun.

Want to Know More... PHS headquarters are located at 325 Walnut Street in a lovely old colonial building. Next door is our 18th century garden and a small orchard. Behind our offices is a beautiful new greenhouse, a vegetable and an herb garden.

Behind The Scenes BRINGING IKEBANA AND BONSAI TO THE SHOW

With the opening of the 1984 Flower Show we welcome not only spring to Philadelphia but also the contributions that gardeners, plant explorers and artists of the orient have made to our gardens and houses in the west. Our theme "A Trip to the Orient" had hardly been announced in early 1982 before we had suggestions for a Korean garden, a Japanese hillside garden and a display highlighting the Asian plants we have come to take for granted in our own gardens. Gradually, the horticultural angles of the Show theme were developed and Show designer Ed Lindemann and the Flower Show Executive Committee turned their thoughts to the artistic contributions from the orient.

Soon it became obvious that we needed a direct line to Tokyo to explore the possibilities of having an expert in Ikebana, the art of Japanese flower arranging, join with us to stage a central feature in the 1984 Show. Such a line of communication was quickly established through the Philadelphia Chapter of Ikebana International and letters started to flow between Tokyo and Philadelphia. Throughout, we were grateful we had plenty of lead time. A typewriter, several sheets of paper and a few photographs are poor instruments when it comes to explaining the Philadelphia Flower Show.

By the time the 1983 Show closed in mid-March, we had the long desired commitment—Professor Kazuhiko Kudo and three of his assistants from the Ohara School would travel to Philadelphia to exhibit in the 1984 Show. Now it was time to get down to details and more photographs, paint chips, floor plans and drawings were mailed to Tokyo. With plans in hand and a better idea of the Show's scale, the professor decided he would need additional helpers. The delegation was expanded to include four assistants and an interpreter from Los Angeles.

Meanwhile, the officers of the Philadelphia Chapter of Ikebana International were forming committees to handle all the details in Philadelphia—staging materials beyond those that would be shipped from Japan, helping to select hundreds of flowers and plants to be used in the displays, and hospitality for our visitors.

With the ikebana exhibit fast becoming a reality, the Flower Show Executive Committee wished to insure as spectacular an exhibit of another important Japanese art form, bonsai. As with ikebana, the Philadelphia area is rich in bonsai resources and we turned to the Pennsylvania Bonsai Society, whose members suggested we look west to California and south to Washington, D.C. for the best in display plants.

The kindest cut of all; a cut tbat makes arrangements more beautiful.

From Los Angeles we received word that a world-renowned bonsai owner and teacher had agreed to exhibit some of his exquisite bonsais in the Philadelphia Show John Y. Naka, born in Colorado, spent his youth in Japan where his grandfather introduced him to bonsai. On returning to the United States in 1935 he farmed and practised landscape architecture, enjoying bonsai as a hobby until 1956 when he became a full-time bonsai instructor. His two books Bonsai Techniques I and Bonsai Techniques II are classics in the field, and Mr. Naka has lectured throughout the USA as well as in Australia, India, Peru, South America, Spain, Thailand and Venezuela. His bonsai collection in Los Angeles numbers more than 300 trees. Some of the plants on exhibit in Philadelphia will go directly to the National Arboretum after the close of the Show when Mr. Naka donates them to the National Bonsai Collection.

While scheduling and organizing the ikebana exhibit revolved around people, challenges in the bonsai area were different. For example E Chase Rosade, a longtime Flower Show exhibitor, and vice president of the National Bonsai Foundation was soon deeply involved in the practicalities of shipping Mr. Naka's delicate, ancient trees from coast to coast. Crates for the massive bonsais had to be built, insurance and state licenses had to be obtained and appropriate staging designed in Philadelphia.

The National Bonsai Collection at the National Aboretum in Washington, D.C. was tantalizingly close, but at first it appeared the plants were not available for exhibit in Philadelphia. None of the trees had left the Arboretum since their arrival from Japan in 1976. Once again, we wrote letters. After several months of negotiations and many discussions between the Advisory Council of the National Arboretum and the United States Department of Agriculture, we received word that the Advisory Council would break all precedents and give permission for six plants to travel to Philadelphia. The dry atmosphere and low light at the Philadelphia Civic Center are less than ideal for bonsai so the six plants will be exhibited in two shifts; the three installed for the Show's opening will be replaced by three other equally valuable specimens in mid-week.

Professor Kazubiko Kudo, bighest ranking senior master of the Obara School of Ikebana, flew from Tokyo to create bis exquisite arrangements as a major Sbow feature.

The National Bonsai Collection

In 1976, 53 rare and priceless bonsai plants were given to the American people by the Japanese to commemorate the United States bicentennial. The bonsai, which range from 38 to 358 years, were presented by the Nippon Bonsai Association in Tokyo. Some were donated by private sources, including the Japanese Royal Family, and others were purchased by the Japan Foundation

The National Bonsai Collection is displayed in a specially designed Japanese-style viewing pavilion at the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Arboretum, 3501 New York Avenue, NE, Washington, DC.

IKEBANA

Ikebana is the ancient flower art of Japan. Most authorities agree the introduction of Buddhism to Japan in the sixth century A.D. coincided with the introduction into the national culture of ritual flowering offerings. By the 1-th century, these ritual flower offerings on the Buddhist altars had developed into an art, with its own form and style.

In the following century. Senkei Ikenobo, high Priest of Rokkakudo Temple in Kyoto, then capital of Japan, established the first rules of flower arranging, and it was through this priest and his followers that the art of Ikebana was expanded and adapted not only to the altar but to public buildings and to the people's homes.

In the late 19th century, Unshin Ohara, a student of the Ikenobo School, started to develop a new style of arranging, incorporating the gaily colored flowers that had recently become available from the western world. Because the formal upright style of Ikenobo was no longer suitable to the new materials, he started to use low, wide containers, permitting a casual style he called moribana, meaning literally "piled-up flowers in a flat basin." At the outset, this new style was roundly criticized by traditional arrangers, but the Japanese people welcomed a fresh approach and Mr. Ohara established the Ohara School, which now has its headquarters in Tokyo, a branch in New York city and chapters throughout the world with 19 in the United States. Houn Ohara, the current headmaster, is the third-generation headmaster. Professor Kazuhiko Kudo, leader of the delegation to the Philadelphia Flower Show, is the highest ranking master at the Ohara Center in Japan. Accompanying him are Masahiro Goto, Masatoshi Tomita, and Hidetaka Suzuki from Japan, Reiga Kawamura from Los Angeles and Mutsuo Tomita from New York.

Ikebana International is a cultural, nonprofit organization established in Tokyo in 1956 to stimulate, cultivate and perpetuate the study of Ikebana, related arts and culture and to strengthen relationships among teachers and students of Ikebana. The Philadelphia Chapter of Ikebana International was chartered in 1964. Of the hundreds of schools of Ikebana, Ikenobo, Ohara, Sogetsu, Koryu & Ichiyo are represented in the Philadelphia Chapter. Chapter meetings include Ikebana demonstrations and lectures on other oriental arts, crafts and related subjects. Workshops, conducted by certified instructors, offer students the opportunity to become familiar with the principal schools and experiment with their own flower arranging skills.

Meetings are held on the fourth Thursday of each month from September through May, except December and March, at 10 a.m. in the Horticulture Center, North Horticultural Drive, West Fairmount Park, unless otherwise specified. For membership information contact Mrs. James T. Kawano, 503 Valley View Road, Merion Station, Pa. 19066.

BONSAI

Development in China and Japan. The origins of bonsai are to be found in China, where trees and shrubs have been grown in highly decorative containers for many centuries. More recently, i.e. two or three hundred years ago, the idea of a tree in a pot migrated to Japan, where it evolved into the form we know today:

In the course of this evolution, notable changes occurred. Japanese containers are more austere than Chinese. Japanese trees are more finished. The Japanese approach is to harmonize the size and depth of the pot with the height of the tree and the thickness of its trunk; the color and texture of the pot with the color and density of the foliage: and the placement of the tree in the pot with the shape of the tree, all with a view to creating a unified aesthetic effect.

While many aesthetic themes can be detected today, the prototype is the mountain scene. The Japanese, as well as the Chinese, are blessed with picturesque mountains, which they have long portrayed in scrolls, drawings and ceramics. From pictures, it was but a small step to owning the tree itself. What better way to capture the experience than to transplant for use in the home a specimen tree that has been shaped and dwarfed by mountain gales, winter snows, impoverished soil and short growing seasons? The lure of such collected specimens is irresistible. Collectors are pursuing them today, not only in Japan, but in the Sierras, Cascades, San Bernardinos and Rockies in this country.

But collecting is time-consuming. The supply of collected trees is limited, and prices are high. So professional growers found ways to produce similar results from nursery stock. This is the source of most bonsai today:

Development in the United States. Bonsai made their first official appearance in the United States early in this century when Lars Anderson, our Ambassador to Japan, imported an impressive collection, which is still to seen in the Arnold Arboretum. However, the actual growing and training of trees was confined for many years to a handful of Japanese-Americans on the West Coast. The real flowering of interest dates from the exposure of American servicemen to Japan following World War II.

Today there are fine public displays in the National Arboretum in Washington, the Brooklyn Botanic Garden, New York and Longwood Gardens, Kennett Square, PA, and two national societies, the American Bonsai Society and Bonsai Clubs International offer encouragement to bonsai enthusiasts.

There are also many books on bonsai, ranging from how-to manuals to photographic essays. A comprehensive collection is to be found in the library of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society:

If you decide to try your hand, books should not be your sole guide. The only statisfactory way to learn how to shape and grow bonsai is to go to classes, attend demonstrations and get in touch with people in the field. Joining the local society is a good way to begin. For more information on classes or the local society in your area write:

HORTICULTURAL RESOURCES IN THE DELAWARE VALLEY

The beautiful and abundant plantings at the Philadelphia Flower Show are evidence that this area is rich and varied in horticultural resources. The 15" year old Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, which produces this Flower Show, is the oldest continuously operating horticultural Society in the country. And horticulture was uppermost in the mind of Philadelphia's founder, William Penn, who in 1682 considered it a "fine green Countrie Towne." Today, with such a multitude of nurseries, arboretums and schools, people in the Delaware Valley and surrounding areas have every opportunity to learn all they want to know about gardening. Listed here are some of our extraordinary resources.

THE COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SERVICE

The Cooperative Extension Service, affiliated with the Land Grant colleges in each state, has an office in your county with a staff of county agents and home economists to give you free, unbiased information in the broad fields of horticulture, agriculture and home economics.

From the Extension office you can obtain information on flower and vegetable gardening; your lawn; soil testing, liming and fertilizing; insect and diease identification and control; home fruit management; planting and care of shrubs and trees; safe use of pesticides and many other subjects.

The county agent is an expert with technical training and experience in the conditions and problems in your area. The agent's job is to answer your questions and to give you helpful advice. When he or she is stumped, a corps of specialists is on tap at the University:

4-H Club activities for young persons ages 8-19 is also part of the Cooperative Extension Service Program. There may already be a club in your community. You can find out by calling your county extension office. To start a club you should have 10 or more members and a volunteer adult leader. Club members can choose their own project and decide how often to meet and where the meetings will be held. Some projects in gardening include: annuals and perennials, growing flowers for cuttings, lawn management, strawberries, vegetable gardening, landscaping and indoor gardening.

Your county agent is as close as your telephone. Or you can stop at the Pennsylvania State University Cooperative Extension exhibit here at the Flower Show (see map on pages 38-39). Following is a listing of the addresses and phone numbers of the agents operating in this area.

Your assets should have the attention of Philadelphia's leading manager of personal trusts and estates.

Compare your investment performance with ours.

Girard's investment management consistently maintains a position of leadership among banks in this area. How? Superior asset management.

We believe that every investor has specific personal objectives which require special strategies. And we offer an extraordinarily wide variety of investment options to provide the maximum planning flexibility for every financial goal. There is no automatic investment "formula" at Girard.

Top performance has helped Girard become the eighth largest bank in the U.S. in managing personal trusts and estates. (The second bank in Philadelphia ranks no better than seventeenth.)

So if your present investment performance isn't meeting your objectives ... or your expectations ... we'd like to show you the difference Girard financial management can make. Call us now, at (215) 585-2303.

Talk it over with Girard: First.

FAIRMOUNT PARK COMMISSION

Memorial Hall Philadelphia, PA 19131 William E. Mifflin, Chair

POND GARDEN WITH MOON VIEWING PLATFORM

A typical pond garden in Japan during the 16th century. Meandering paths and ponds give the illusion of a larger and never ending landscape to admire from varying angles. The pond garden represents the type of garden associated with Shoinzurki architecture, which can be seen at the Japanese House and Garden in Fairmount Park.

FLORISTS TRANSWORLD DELIVERY ASSOCIATION

Adelberger Florist P.O. Box 294 Wayne, PA 19087 Ted Adelberger, Chair

THE ART OF FLORAL DESIGN EXHIBITED IN A JAPANESE GARDEN

Look at a miniature Japanese flower show. Beautifully painted screens are woven throughout a stone garden, providing backdrops for an assortment of flower arrangements. Flowering crabapple trees, azaleas and rhododendrons surround ponds filled with waterlilies. This colorful display captures the eye and moves the spirit to thoughts of Spring.

FRIENDS HOSPITAL

Roosevelt Blvd. & Adams Avenue Philadelphia, PA 19124 Mona D. Gold, Chair

ADAPTIVE GARDENING

This lovely outside garden is equipped with the latest in adaptive gardening tools. Hand reachers, easy kneelers and hanging baskets on pulleys enable handicapped people to enjoy the therapy that gardening offers.

FOX CHASE CANCER CENTER

7701 Burholme Avenue Philadelphia, PA 19111 Patricia Harsche, Chair

NEIGHBORS HELPING NEIGHBORS

A three-dimensional rendering of the Fox Chase Cancer Center campus. The natural setting with azaleas, dogwoods and bulbs is displayed in the foreground. The Center's activities with its neighbors are highlighted.

GALE NURSERIES

1716 Schoolhouse Road Gwynedd, PA 19436 Charles H. Gale, Chair

WITHIN THE GARDEN WALL

A garden house placed within a grove of fragrant apple blossoms sets the tone for this oriental scene. Abundant flowers and masses of wisteria in a semi-formal design, border an imported well and lead to the garden gate.

GARRETT HILL FLORISTS INC.

P.O. Box 944 Bryn Mawr, PA 19010 Bill Giangiulio, Chair

REFLECTIONS IN THE ORIENT

This oriental design gives the viewer a look at landscaping native to the Far East. The oriental scene is bordered by azaleas and gardenias and features a footbridge lined with flower arrangements.

GRANT-LEIGHTON ASSOCIATES

ORIENTAL NEW YEAR

The many carnations that are available in the Delaware Valley are used to depict the life and color of the oriental New Year.

A highlight of this exhibit is the Mona Lisa anemone grown exclusively by Peter Hellberg Company.

IKEBANA INTERNATIONAL, PHILADELPHIA CHAPTER—Central Feature

503 Valley View Road Merion Station, PA 19066 Lorraine Toji, Chair

IKEBANA

This flower arranging exhibit is similar to those found in Japan. Staged by The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, the exhibition includes several arrangements by a group of outstanding artists from the Ohara School of Ikebana, Tokyo. These include two very large arrangements and additional arrangements by members of the Philadelphia Chapter of Ikebana International from the Ichiyo, Ikenobo, Koryu, Ohara and Sogetsu Schools of Ikebana.

From Japan we welcome Professor Kazuhiko Kudo, Masahiro Goto, Hidetaka Suzuki and Masatoshi Tomita; from Los Angeles Reiga Kawamura; and Mutsuo Tomita, director, Ohara Center of New York.

JUDD'S HOLLYLAN NURSERY

516 E. Holly Avenue Pitman, NJ 08071 William Judd, Chair

A REFUGE IN THE PINE BARRENS

"N-K-P"-THE ELEMENTS OF GROWTH

Nitrogen, phosphorous, potassium: certainly they are elements found all around us, but what do they have to do with roses? Soil pH and acidity—what effect do they have on the garden? This exhibit explains the importance of these three major plant nutrients and shows visitors how to test for adequate amounts of each in their gardens.

Everything's Coming Up Gaudio's

HOW TO SEE THE SHOW: Go with the flow

(A detailed floor plan showing specific exhibits is on pages 38-39.)

ARRIVAL POINT: BOTTOM OF ESCALATORS

A new world is before you and behind you and to your left and right. The map on this page will orient you. We suggest you take a quick turn around the Show using this map to give you a feeling of the flow, of what's available and what you want to devote more time to. After your preliminary tour, we suggest you take a break, perhaps in one of the food service areas and study this map and the one on pages 38-39.

THE SHOW INCLUDES THREE MAJOR AREAS:

- 1. Major, nurseries, florists, educational and garden club gardens. These are directly in front of you.

 —You can move one of three ways: through the center Ikebana and Bonsai courts directly in front of you (in the major exhibit area), or to the left or right. Each exhibit is described in this program beginning on page 20.
- 2. Competitive Classes, plant societies and educational exhibits. Turn left or right at escalators and left or right again. Your back will be to the escalator. The competitive classes include niches, rooms and tables, pressed plants, horticultural entries, balconies and miniatures.
- 3. Trade booths. You've been inspired; now you can buy—plants, containers, greenhouses, tools, etc. at more than 80 trade booths. You can reach the trade booth section by traveling in a straight line directly from the escalators. Specific trade booths are listed by numbers on the floor plan on pages 38-39; trade booth names, and addresses are listed beginning on page 48.

OTHER AREAS OF INTEREST

Restaurants—Three food service areas, snack bars and a cocktail lounge are located along the perimeter of the Show. The floor plan on pages 38-39 will further help you locate these areas.

Restrooms—These are located on the perimeter of the Show, just outside the exits along the left and right walls. See floor plan on pages 38-39.

First Aid—The Red Cross will be on hand throughout the Show See bottom of floor plan, pages 38 and 39, left of center.

Membership and Information Booth/Missing Persons—Go to the right of the escalator, toward Gate 2. Here is where you can have your questions about the Show answered and where you can join the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society. Plan to meet friends, family members including children here if you become separated. Sorry, no paging.

Lectures and Demonstrations in Horticultural Hall

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society and Allied Florists will present lectures and demonstrations on a variety of horticultural subjects including arrange ments, house plants, pruning, vegetable gardens, care of trees and shrubs.

Daily schedules will be posted outside of Horticultural Hall and announcements will be made just before each lecture or demonstration.

ORIENTAL SPRING

"While we are influenced by the gardens of the past and must consider the desires of the garden owner, we should still strive to create something different whenever we undertake a new piece of work," wrote Sakuteiki, a Japanese landscape designer. Here the exhibitor incorporates some designs and traditions of the past with the tori arch, plank bridge, turtle island and carpstone. These, blended with color and sculpted plants, maintain the feeling of peace and tranquility of the Japanese garden.

Visit the Restaurants that started the Renaissance.

Ten years ago when Philadelphians wanted unique and scrumptious food, they usually traveled to New York. Now New Yorkers, and much of the rest of the world, travel to Philadelphia. There's been a Restaurant Renaissance; and now the city of brotherly love is the city of "loverly" food!

Frög hoppened upon the scene ten years ago with its innovative blend of French-American-Thai cooking. It was one of the original restaurants that started the Renaissance. The Commissary, with its unique approach to restauranting, gave the Renaissance and Philadelphia something very special. Four years later the 16th Street Bar & Grill and the new and very different City Bites continue a terrific ten year old restaurant tradition.

Now when people visit Philadelphia, they come not only to see the history . . . but also to taste it in the makings. Please join us at 1, 2, 3 or all 4 of our restaurants.

SUN COMPANY

100 Matsonford Road Radnor, PA 19087 Maureen Walton, Chair

SUN COMPANY WELCOMES YOU TO THE ORIENT An authentic Japanese garden welcomes Flower Show visitors as they descend the escalator. Wind chimes and colorful calligraphied banners proclaim the Sun Company welcome in four languages.

TELEFLORA

410 E. Fornance Street Norristown, PA 19401 Joseph Genuardi, Chair

FESTIVAL OF FLOWERS

This major flower wire service shows its international scope by creating an oriental flower market, alive with color and fragrance. The scene recreates an annual flower festival in Japan.

TEMPLE UNIVERSITY DEPARTMENT OF HORTICULTURE AND LANDSCAPE DESIGN

Meetinghouse Road Ambler, PA 19002 Glen Geer, Chair

JAPANESE GARDENS

Take a look at three traditional types of Japanese Gardens: the Tea Garden, the flat Sand and Rock Garden, and the Forest Garden. The elements of Japanese gardens are the same as those in American gardens, but the use of these elements are strikingly different. The exhibit points out the symbolism and sensitivity of Japanese garden design and contrasts the ways that Americans use the same elements.

VICK'S WILDGARDENS, INC.

A PLACE IN THE WOODS

A small hide-away in the deep woods, or in your own backyard. Here's a place to relax, read and let your everyday problems float away in the small stream. Dogwoods, azaleas and flowering shrubs are in bloom. Lush ferns and small wildflowers weave through the mossy ground between large rocks. Birds sing in the trees and you may even catch a glimpse of a rabbit or a squirrel.

WHITEMARSH NURSERY

A LITTLE BIT OF CHINA

The focus of this exhibit is on a city garden. Many plants including trees and shrubs from China are included in this design for limited spaces.

WINTERTHUR MUSEUM AND GARDENS

Winterthur, Delaware 19735 Walter O. Petroll, Chair

ASIA. MOTHER OF GARDENS

The opening of trade with the orient influenced not only the decorative arts but the very composition of gardens in the West. A garden seat, modeled after an actual piece of chinoiserie in the garden of a Wilmington China trader, is surrounded by banks of oriental trees, shrubs and herbaceous plants, some rare and some very familiar in today's gardens.

Restaurant LaTerrasse is just around the corner.

STAR® Quality...

...has been our tradition for nine decades. Back then our work was done by hand, wheelbarrows or mule. And Star Roses were greenhouse grown from cuttings instead of outdoors on today's hardy, vigorous rootstocks.

Today we are abreast of the times—innovating many practices and methods—and automating wherever possible. With all the modern methods we still rely on many "green fingers" and the constant, personal care which bring you Star Roses and other Star Quality plants your parents and grandparents only dreamed about.

When we began growing and selling other hardy ornamental plants our goal stayed the same—to give you the best quality for your money.

And when it comes to the introduction of new and exciting kinds of roses and hardy ornamentals, we are guided by the same goals and beliefs. From the world's most popular rose, Peace, to one of the most stunning of the newer roses, DOLLY PARTON, to a whole new world of hollies, the hardy Blue Hollies, we have done our best to bring you the best.

Our World Is Your Garden

Horticulture is a magazine about plants: how to find them, grow them, use them, and enjoy them. We deal with practically every aspect of gardening from tropicals to vegetables, soil improvement to garden design. Each topic is covered thoroughly and accurately, reflecting our notion that success with plants comes from understanding both their possibilities and their limitations.

To this end, every issue includes numerous illustrations that are both informative and handsome. The writing is lively and intelligent, providing advice without preaching. It is, in short, a magazine for expert gardeners and those who would become experts.

A subscription to Horticulture, The Magazine of American Gardening, costs $18 for 12 monthly issues, $30 for 24 issues. That's a modest price for the best in garden writing. As a gift for a beginning gardener, Horticulture might spell the difference between disenchantment and the development of a lifetime avocation. Looked at in those terms, it's a remarkably good value.

Please order now and enclose a check, money order, or the name, number, and expiration date of your Master Card, VISA, or American Express account. If you would prefer to be billed, please so indicate. Your first issue will arrive in about eight weeks. We do hope you subscribe.

THE GLENMEDE TRUST COMPANY

Welcome to the 1985 Philadelphia Flower Show . . . A Touch of Britain

The British are Coming. The British are Coming. Again.

This time, however, to capture our horticultural hearts. The beautiful, exuberant gardens you see at this Philadelphia Flower Show come from a long tradition of British influence on gardening in the Delaware Valley dating back to William Penn, Capability Brown and including the 19th century gardeners William Robinson and Gertude Jekyll.

Since our theme "A Touch of Britain" was established back in the summer of 1982, there have been transatlantic visits, letters and phone calls. We are honored to have Robin Herbert, president of the Royal Horticultural Society visit the Philadelphia Flower Show as a judge. British exhibitors also have flown over to share their expertise as exhibitors: Sheila Macqueen, one of England's great flower arrangers, and the students from Merrist Wood Agricultural College in Surrey. Rosemary Verey, the internationally known British author is here, too, to judge some of our major exhibits and to talk about the Chelsea Show and English gardening.

Yet, most of all, we are proud of our brilliant exhibitors, who have eagerly researched and painstakingly forced into bloom the delphiniums and daffodils, daylilies and dogwoods you see here. They have been planning and planting for months, and indeed years. Alongside these exhibitors stand an energetic staff and the more than 1,000 volunteers for whose contributions the Society is endlessly grateful. All of them, exhibitors, volunteers and staff have one goal only this week: to delight and inspire our visitors to the Show.

Today's complex financial world demands a long-range plan of action.

You may already have achieved substantial net worth. Or you may be on your way up. In either case, there are many persuasive reasons to consider the comprehensive personal financial planning available through Mellon Bank.

The unique Mellon approach begins by asking you the right questions and listening very carefully. This is essential in developing an understanding of your individual financial objectives and in creating for you the special "game plan" needed to reach these goals. It may include tax planning, traditional and non-traditional investments, business goals, retirement and estate planning. We re-evaluate each plan continuously as the financial climate, tax laws and your own circumstances change.

Those who take advantage of Mellon's total financial planning come to appreciate the expert recommendations, diversity of resources and highly personal service. For a copy of our booklet, "Personal Financial Planning in Action," please call or write:

Building an Exhibit From Here and There Transatlantic Garden Cooperation

by Ed Lindemann

hree years ago I visited the world famous Chelsea Flower Show in London, England. A trip to the Chelsea Show is a special treat for any gardener. Because I am closely involved with the set-up of the Philadelphia Flower Show, it was especially interesting for me to visit Chelsea during their set up and to meet with exhibitors as they worked behind the scenes to create their displays.

The Chelsea Show and the Philadelphia Show differ in several respects. The Philadelphia Show is a winter show held indoors; all of the plants must be forced into bloom out of their natural season. Architectural structures are usually facades similiar to those used on a stage set. The Chelsea Flower Show is held out-ofdoors in May when the weather is milder. Plants for garden displays are planted directly into the ground: Temporary walls and pools are constructed to complete the settings. The short set up time is the same for both shows. Here and abroad, the exhibitors have approximately one week to construct their garden displays.

During set-up week at Chelsea, I was particularly impressed with one exhibit. The display was a perfect example of a city roof garden. The exhibit presented by the Merrist Wood Agricultural College obviously impressed the Chelsea judges who awarded it a gold medal.

I visited Chelsea just around the time we were starting to formalize plans for our 1985 theme: "A Touch of Britain, Our Garden Heritage."

A riverbank garden was the theme of the Merrist Wood entry in the 1983 Chelsea Flower Show, A collection of moisture loving perennials, a garden house and a boat dock completed the gold medal winning display.

On my flight home I kept thinking about the Merrist Wood exhibit. I also thought of the Philadelphia Flower Show just past and the Bulbs for All Seasons display that won a top award for Delaware Valley College of Science and Agriculture. It was then the idea of bringing a tangible touch of Britain to the Philadelphia Flower Show was born. Later it was introduced to the Flower Show Executive Committee and our invitations to the students of Delaware Valley College and England's Merrist Wood College to stage a collaborative exhibit were accepted.

The logistics had to be worked out. Because of plant importation laws and expensive freight charges, the practical approach was to ask Merrist Wood to develop the exhibit design with a student competition, and to have Delaware Valley secure and force the plants and to gather the architectural supplies. Working an ocean apart was no easy task. To further complicate matters, the British and American students had never seen each other's show. Correspondence and telephone calls crisscrossed the Atlantic and in the spring of 1984 I traveled back to meet with student and faculty members of Merrist Wood at their Chelsea exhibit and to visit their campus in Surrey, south of London.

Geoff Ace, head of the Landscape Construction Department at Merrist Wood was enthusiastic about the project. Several students who had worked with staging at Chelsea were chosen to travel with their instructor to Philadelphia in '85. The winner of the design competition would also join the delegation. I learned that the English students' concerns were similar to those expressed by the students of Delaware Valley College. Both groups were neryous that the other might not be quite as flexible as their own. I assured each group that flower show staging problems were the same the world over: never enough time; too much of one kind of plant in bloom and not enough of another. A fountain sprays too high or a pool inevitable springs a leak in the middle of the night when no one is around. In the end it all comes together. The students in both groups were relieved to learn that they shared the same fears and problems and that their solutions were usually similar. Team work, the key to success, was beginning to evolve.

Last summer the Merrist Wood students submitted a series of exhibit plans to the Philadelphia Flower Show's design committee. Two semifinalists were chosen; one a traditional plan, and the other more contemporary. The two plans were given to the students and faculty of Delaware Valley College for final selection. The more traditional plan designed by Kathleen Askew was chosen for construction at the 1985 Philadelpia Flower Show.

In fall and early winter the network of letters and phone calls increased across the ocean. Plants, quantity of stone, type of mortar, copy for brochures, airplane reservations, ground transportation, lodging and hospitality all required planning. There were times when the two groups felt very close and times when it seemed unthinkable to work jointly on such a project so many miles apart. But everyone persevered, and time marched on.

Finally late February arrived, and one cold night the British touched down at the overseas terminal of Philadelphia International Airport. For the first time the students from Merrist Wood along with their instructor set foot on American soil. Their drive to the rural Bucks County campus of Delaware Valley College in Doylestown was filled with uncertainty and anticipation. The next day, the students and faculty members from both colleges began to get acquainted, and strangers were becoming friends. Throughout set-up week the two groups joined as a unit and began the task of creating a major flower show feature. The months of planning paid off as the personality of the exhibit developed. The fears about inflexibility quickly diminished as constant alterations were mutually agreed upon. Give and take, suggestion and consideration, opinion and reconsideration combined with fun and learning created a special bond. The "Brits" from Worplesdon and the "Aggies" from Delaware Valley became a team. Together they created something unique. Together they created the first internationally produced garden in the Philadelphia Flower Show. A garden that is truly "A Touch of Britain," not only exemplifying our garden heritage, but expressing a promise of cooperation for the future regardless of the distance between people.

Ed Lindemann is the Flower Show designer.

The 64th Chelsea Flower Show, London, England, 1985

Open to the public, Wednesday, May 22 through Friday, May 24. Open for the Queen and her family only, Monday, May 20. Open for Royal Horticultural Society members only, Tuesday, May 21.

The Chelsea Show is a 27-acre outdoor gardening extravaganza, sponsored annually by the Royal Horticultural Society at the Royal Hospital Grounds in Chelsea, London. Eighteen fine gardens are constructed on the beautiful grounds; a three and a half acre marquee houses almost 120 floral exhibits; and approximately 180 gardening furniture and equipment dealers set up along the tree lined avenues on the hospital grounds.

Show manager Allan J. Sawyer estimates that by the time the Show closes some quarter of a million people will have seen the displays. Royal Horticultural Society membership, which includes a Show ticket for Members Day is 19 pounds (5 pounds of which is a one-time registration fee). Sheila Macqueen: British Flower Arranger Par Excellence Visits the Philadelphia Flower Show

by Jane G. Pepper

er father thought she was mad, in 1931, when she signed on for a job in a flower shop. The hours were long and the remuneration, 5 shillings ($6.25) a week, did not even cover her bus fare into central London. For Sheila Macqueen, however, a dream had come true and she had progressed from trainee to junior staff member at Flower Decorations, Ltd. Today with more that 50 years of experience behind her, Mrs. Macqueen is recognized throughout Great Britain, Europe, South and East Africa, Australia and North America as one of the world's greatest flower arrangers and demonstrators.

Her mentor in those early days was Constance Spry, founder of the Constance Spry Organization, which included a shop in London, several schools of flower arranging and another shop on New York's Fifth Avenue, which opened in 1935. Before Mrs. Spry, England's pre-war flower arrangements featured a limited range of flowers - carnations, a few orchids and masses of asparagus fern - arranged in a stiff Victorian style.

From her shop in London's Bond Street, Mrs. Spry gradually introduced a new style, incorporating delphiniums, foxglove, peonies, and many other flowers from the garden. To these she added ornamental cabbages, and branches laden with blossoms in spring and berries in fall. Audiences were fascinated with these huge free flowing displays and traffic would grind to a halt on some of London's most fashionable streets as passersby stopped to gaze at arrangements in shop windows. Constance Spry was all the rage and Sheila Macqueen, the new trainee, was busy from dawn to dusk, creating arrangements in bank lobbies, private homes, for art galleries and for an endless round of debutante balls.

Constance Spry, however, would never create an arrangement in front of an audience, and in 1958 she invited Mrs. Macqueen to accompany her on a lecture tour to Australia. Mrs. Spry acted as commentator while Mrs. Macqueen demonstrated. In 1963 Mrs. Macqueen was invited to return to Australia. En route home she was invited by the Garden Club of America to demonstrate her art at the Pierre Hotel, New York, Thus began a long, happy and productive relationship with garden clubs and other organizations in the United States.

These days Mrs. Macqueen divides her days between the flower arranging school she runs in England and lecture tours in the United States. She is also a prolific writer and has, among other books, the following to her credit: Flower Arranging From Your Garden, (Chilton, Radnor, 1977), Sheila Macqueen's Complete Flower Arranging, (New York Times, N. Y., 1980) and Flowers for Arrangement, (W. H. L. Collingridge, London, 1962).

In appreciation for her work, the National Association of Flower Arrangements Society of Great Britain has made her an Associate of Honour and the Royal Horticultural Society has awarded her its highest recognition, the Victoria Medal of Honour. She is also the recipient of the Garden Club of America Katharine Thomas Carey Medal for education in the field of flower arrangement.

We are delighted to welcome Sheila Macqueen to Philadelphia to stage a major exhibit, "Getting Ready for Chelsea" and as an expert judge in the competitive classes as we celebrate "A Touch of Britain."

hiladelphia has enjoyed a "touch of Britain" in her gardens, ever since its founding by William Penn as a "greene countrie towne" in 1682. The Swedes may have been here first, but it was the early English Quakers, bringing over seeds, grafts for fruit trees, and English gardening books and techniques, who were to make a permanent imprint on Philadelphia garden style. We can enjoy seeing the British influence displayed at the 1985 Philadelphia Flower Show. As we then go around the Delaware Valley, we can appreciate traces of three centuries of British garden influence that continue to show themselves even today.

At Pennsbury,* the recreation of Penn's manor on the Delaware, one can get an idea of the practical 17th century Quaker garden. While there was greater emphasis on fruit trees, vegetables and herbs than on flowers, the early English settlers did enjoy such flowers as roses, tulips and carnations.

The Second Bank of the United States now stands on the site of the great mid-18th century garden of Charles Norris, on Chestnut Street between 4th and 5th Streets. It contained a little "wilderness," which was popular in England at the time. It also had the more old-fashioned square parterres and beds, intersected with gravel and grass walks. While that garden no longer exists, just two blocks away colorful modern flowers keep the 18th century style parterre of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society garden cheerful for visitors nine months of the year.

A very different, informal, kind of 18th century garden reminds us of another English garden connection, the extensive two-way traffic in seeds and plants. Philadelphia's John Bartram was responsible for introducing more American plants to England than any other individual; his trees may still be seen on English estates. At the same time, Bartram's collecting trips were funded by English clients and patrons, and he received seeds from England including rhubarb, along with a recipe for rhubarb pie. The Bartram nursery was continued into the 19th century, and his house and garden (the latter in the process of restoration) can be seen today.

When Capability Brown and his followers were creating great sweeping vistas in England, that style crossed the Atlantic, One can no longer see such a landscape around "Solitude" on the grounds of the Philadelphia Zoo, but on can see an "English Park" at the Morris Arboretum.

The "Victorian" garden style which followed, certainly shows its English origin in its very name. A colorful patterned display of annuals characterized much of 19th century gardening, and this can now be seen in the Victorian garden at Maxwell Mansion in Germantown. The Victorian style is still popular for public gardens, such as that at Logan Circle.

That style of gardening, which most of us think of as British, the use of perennial borders with a subtle mix of color and contrast of texture, came into being in England at the end of the 19th century, later becoming popular in America. The English border of perennial bloom is a little more difficult to achieve in the Philadelphia climate, but one may see it in a small corner of a tiny yard, in the glorious double border of Sir John Thouron in Unionville, or in Liddon Pennock's new "English garden" at Meadowbrook Farm. So we see, there is more than a "touch of Britain" in Philadelphia gardens today.

Elizabeth P. McLean is a garden historian who visits England regularly and leads study tours there for the Morris Arboretum.

Horticultural Resources in the Delaware Valley

he exquisite plantings at the Philadelphia Flower Show whet our appetites for spring's flowering and more of the beautiful mass plantings seen here. Philadelphia is a horticultural mecca offering scores of public gardens and arboreta. In addition, visits to some of the finest private gardens are offered to members of some of the organizations listed here. Many of these gardens offer beautiful spectacles even through the winter. Get out your calendar and start planning spring and summer tours of Philadelphia's horticultural riches. If you'd like a complete illustrated guide to the gardens, we suggest you pick up a copy of Gardens and Arboreta of Philadelphia and the Delaware Valley ($3.75) available at most of the organizations listed below or at Morris Arboretum.

A Touch of Britain

A Garden Heritage...

The show's central exhibit created by Charlie and Chuck Gale, second and third generation nurserymen.

he earth may have been created in seven days, but it took a couple of years to create the spectacular central exhibit for the Philadelphia Flower Show. Charlie Gale reckons, not counting his 50 years of landscaping experience as well as his son's two decades plus, that they've been preparing for their "Garden Heritage" exhibit for at least 10 years. That's how long they've been experimenting with forcing perennials into bloom.

Charlie (Sr.) and Chuck, the second and third generation proprietors of Gale Nurseries, have been interested in European gardening styles for a long time. Not only have they visited public and private gardens abroad, they've amassed a comprehensive library on the subject. Not content to gaze upon masterpieces, they've designed and built gardens inspired by their interest. The Show's knot garden is not the first of its kind that they've designed and built; out on the Main Line is a garden many times the size of the one exhibited at the Show. It includes a knot garden, an English perennial garden and an Italian garden.

Whilé European gardens have always fascinated Charlie and Chuck, they've also created gardens, both public and private, in a variety of styles. They are particularly proud of a bilevel Williamsburg garden they built for a client on 1/4 acre featuring a formal geometric perennial garden, a vegetable garden, an area for herbs and an orchard of dwarf fruit trees. Another of their unique "design and build gardens" is a suburban garden atop a submerged house. "It took hundreds of yards of topsoil on top of the house to establish planting areas," said the senior Gale, "but when it was finished it was beautiful: wildflowers, ferns and an almost forest-like setting created by the trees screening the house."

To prepare for their British garden exhibit, the Gales' used every inch of their 7,000 sq. feet of greenhouse space in Gwynedd to force the plants. A complicated planting schedule was drawn up: for example, seeds for the delphiniums needed for this Show were planted in May '84, the hollyhocks in August and ageratum in September. Some perennials like the shasta daisies or veronicas were planted in spring of 1983, to allow them two summers' growth outdoors. All the perennials were placed in a refrigerated container this past October to hasten their dormancy period and to speed up bloom for the Show.

The Gales prepared equally complicated schedules for weekly fertilizing, light and temperature requirements for all the plants, including the pear trees, roses and evergreens. During the cold months, the soil beneath the plants was heated by hot water tubes placed under the containers. Once the summer vegetation that provided needed carbon dioxide to stimulate young plants' growth was gone, the Gales revved up their CO₂ generators. As the days got shorter, they increased day length artificially to 18 hours, fooling the plants into behaving as though they were basking in long summer days. If the plants began to bloom too soon they moved them from a 50°F. area to a 40° area.

These activities only skim the surface of what goes into such an exhibit. Along with the planning, it takes fiscal courage and patience. Visitors see only the surface; behind the scenes, twice as many plants as are needed are grown, so only the best are selected. The Gales change their plants at the Show constantly to make sure each and every visitor enjoys a fresh display. Some varieties are changed two or three times during the eight day show; others daily.

In July 1984 Charlie and Chuck Gale were already preparing these Sonia roses for the central exhibit in the 1985 Flower Show. Following a summer in the field two years ago, the roses were then grown in containers throughout the summer of '84 at Gale Nurseries. In October the Gales moved them to the refrigeration unit for their dormancy phase and, in January moved them into the greenhouse for forcing into flower in time for the Show.

The Competitive Classes of the Philadelphia Flower Show

In 1985, 251 competitive classes are open to exhibitors

t's seven a.m. The Show doesn't open to the public until 10 a.m., yet exhibitors cluster around the niches. The activity looks like the floor of the stock exchange in the midst of an international crisis. Barriers protect the work tables from jostlers. The arrangers' concentration is as intense as if they were carrying nitroglycerine up a rocky hill. They've practiced this routine for months. Now they check their materials: flowers, foliage, vines, containers, lights, screens, pins, tape, oasis and on the list goes.

Over in the competitive gardens, groups of women and men mulch gardens, check furniture and move it again and again; they pull out wilted blossoms and plant full grown trees. They've worked out their plans on cellar floors with chalk and string and on living room floors with milk crates and brown paper. They are as serious as if they were construction workers at a building site.

In the horticourt section, exhibitors line up. A stethoscope dangles from one woman's pocket; on her way to work, she's stopped by to enter five plants. Another exhibitor carries his attache case in one hand and a succulent in another as he inches his way up through the "Passing" line. Another firmly seats her eight year old (the baby sitter didn't show) while she counts the plants on the dolly she has just moved from her car.

These competitors come from all over; they have many interests. They plant rock gardens, force bulbs, create the grandest topiaries or exquisite tiny architectural sets or interiors for the miniature division. Last year, these exhibitors made almost 1800 entries in the competitive classes; they won 234 blue ribbons, 236 red and 202 yellows.

The people who enter these classes may be natural born growers or they may struggle to perfect the art of arranging. They work as hard as any pitcher fine-tuning a fast ball, as hard as any tennis pro working on a serve. They may work in teams, or they may be loners. They all know that in competing they are perfecting their skills, their art; they are stretching themselves and they are creating something wonderful to inspire and share with others.

Rosemarie Vassalluzzo used Peruvian Iilies, tulips, gladiolus, freesia and willow to suggest "Gone with the Wind" in the 1984 medium niche class, "Silver Screen." Vassalluzzo is a member of Four Lane's End Garden Club.

Adelle Webb's medium pedestal entry in "Splendor" won an honorable mention in the 1984 Show. Webb is a member of the Huntingdon Valley Garden Club.

Ann Marlar's winged euonymus and white phalaenopsis netted a blue ribbon for her "Opposites Attract" entry in the medium pedestal class in the '84 Show. Marlar is a member of the Garden Club of Springfield.

You Too Can Enter the Competitive Classes at the Philadelphia Flower Show

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society mails an exhibitor's schedule and guide to all PHS members in September. If you are not a member and wish to receive a schedule, write to Flower Show Secretary, Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, 325 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, PA 19106.

Niches: Throughout the week, arrangers compete in 19 classes, seven niches in each class, for a total of 133 niches. The niches are small, medium or large. Within the boundaries of the niche frame, the exhibitor creates the arrangement.

The arrangers received the competitive class schedule in September; at that time they selected the class they planned to interpret. For example, the exhibitors might have chosen to enter the large niche on opening day: "Strafford-on-Avon, an interpretation of a Shakespearean play to be picked by the exhibitor." Should she pick Hamlet, for example, her job would be to interpret the play through the use of an arrangement of flowers and other plant materials. If you were doing it, which flowers, vines, foliage, lighting, container, backdrop or sculpture would you select to enhance your subject? Some adventurous exhibitors will schedule three or four entries throughout the week.

Often the talented arrangers sculpt their own statues, scout driftwood on farflung, international beaches, import flowers from around the world, make their own containers from a staggering array of materials including hospital operating room flotsam, and jetsam from auto repair shops. They paint, carve, mosaic or cover the backgrounds with fabric. Through the year, their roving eyes assess the shape of every kind of branch, textures of flowers, colors. Their minds are as restless as any painter's or sculptor's filling space with form and shape.

Pedestals: These arrangements are more freewheeling than the niches. They are not restricted by framing. The titles of some of the six classes open during the week give a clue to the scope open to the arrangers: "Winged Ascent," "Bold Accent," "Moods of Nature." The large pedestals are staged on a column 42 inches high and 14 inches in diameter set within an 8 ft. high shallow curved background, 5 ft. across. The medium pedestal is staged on a 40 inch high column, 12 in. square at the top.

Miniature Arrangements: These tiny gems of arrangements are not to exceed 5 inches in any direction. The arrangers whose work you see have all used dried plant material to interpret the literary themes of Keats, Robert Burns, Walter Scott and Samuel Taylor Coleridge. If you saw only photos of the lilliputian arrangements, it would be hard to judge their size since everything is so exactingly in scale.

Rooms: A flower arrangement interprets the magical products of Broadway and the English stage: musical comedy, drama, comedy and maybe even an opera. The creation of the room and the arrangement is a team effort.

Table: Teatime. A table set for tea inspires arrangers to heights of whimsy, zaniness, sophistication or just plain cosiness. The muse comes from literature and from places we dream of going to, drawn from nostalgia, books, movies. These flower arrangements and a few key accessories can transport us to a momentarily fulfilling environment.

Miniature Classes: Ten brilliant architectural, stage-like miniature representations of themes from British history and literature carry us to some of our favorite stories: Wind in the Willows, Camelot, Romeo and Juliet. Some let us peek into representations of the homes of some great people, past and present, e.g. Sir Walter Scott or James Herriot. The background and skills of the creators of these miniatures vary widely; a nationally known carpenter who can reproduce brilliant examples of antiques, teachers, homemakers and businessmen.

Edith Farnum's miniature, entered in A Trip to the Orient, won an honorable mention last year. The beautiful setting was Laurel Hill. Farnum is a member of The Planters.

Garden Classes: These exhibits are definitely a garden club team effort, worked on for at least one year and often two. The club draws on the talents of its members, pushing even the neophyte to use undreamed of skills. This class has turned moderately interested growers into scholarly researchers, incessant listmakers, relentlessly self-critical designers. From their commitment to this large scale project, they teach themselves and others new lessons in the use of space, the selection of appropriate plants for micro-environments, the combinations of textures and colors. This year they had the option creating either a town or country garden, measuring 22 ft x 22 ft. They are required to work in a rounded corner, using an 8 ft. garden wall of sand colored stucco with gray stone. Compare the four gardens and see the versatility of ideas presented by each club.

Terrace Class: Today condominiums and town houses shift our gardening options, and the spirit of the city grower leaps over towers and fences to create container gardens of delicate but hardy substance. The dreamers have created a spot for two to sit and relax, eat or meditate. A terrace garden means you have added a special kind of room to the house.

Designs for Pressed Plant Materials: A handful of seeds, petals, a few twigs; see what they can create. Imaginative artists whose palettes are assembled from the myriad materials found in the garden, rearrange our perception of reality. A half inch piece of juniper becomes a tree on a hill created from a bit of reed, tiny leaves from one plant become a monster daisy. The possibilities are limitless when these artists break out of straight line thinking. While imagination is cosmic, these artists must give close attention to deail and possess infinite patience when placing the materials on paper, board or cloth backgrounds. Each year the exhibitors become more ingenious, creating not only framed artwork, but lamps, screens and other shapes to delight Show visitors.

Horticultural Classes

We are proud of the horticultural section of the Flower Show. Our friends tell us that the number and quality of entries still surpasses all other shows. The fundamental idea of the horticultural classes is to encourage excellence in growing single plants and small groups of plants and to show what can be achieved by a combination of horticultural skill, good taste and meticulous care. The classes are open to anyone and last year 183 exhibitors entered 1,511 entries; they won 194 blue ribbons, 196 red and 163 golds.

(e.g. a botanical collection) depending on the rules in the schedule.

Drawing up the schedule is an art: the Committee seeks ideas that will challenge the exhibitors' abilities and at the same time interest the visitors to come to the Show. The classes must always be a mixture of tried and true favorites and innovations. Above all the classes for exhibitors must be horticulturally possible, that is, the specifications must call for something that can be produced in March.

When the plants arrive at the Show, every entry is checked for grooming before it is accepted. Many of the horticultural classes change twice after the Show opens, once on Tuesday and once on Friday. Judges for these classes travel at their own expense from as far away as Canada, Tennessee, Montana and Wisconsin.

In many of the horticultural classes the competitive spirit is quite intense and the blue ribbon is a cherished trophy. The intensity of the joust is a measure of the standards the exhibitors continually set for themselves.

Rhododendrons in the Garden

An exhibit for both professional and amateur rhododendron growers. Many varieties of rhododendrons are intermingled with companion plants to show their suitability and beauty in the garden.

American Rock Garden Society 331 Earlham Terrace Philadelphia, PA 19144 Tam Hartell, Chair

From the New World

The American contemporary rock garden is really quite English in design. This garden is dotted with plants that have been used in English gardens since the days of early plant hunters. Although plants in the exhibit are from regions ranging from sea level to the mountain, plants available in this region are emphasized.

A Small Sampling

The problem of landscaping a small space is more frequently encountered today than ever before. Part of the solution lies in the imaginative use of appropriate plants and building materials. This exhibit demonstrates the suitability of dwarf evergreens and other companion dwarf plants in a limited space setting.

A Place for Reflection

The beauty of statuary and gentle pools of water enhance this exhibit. Azaleas, rhododendrons and Norway spruce guide the way up the wooded path to a private, stone-walled brick patio.

Delaware Valley College of Science and Agriculture Rt. 202 & New Britain Road Doylestown, PA 18901 Dr. John D. Martin, Chair

A Touch of Britain

Students from Merrist Wood Agriculture College, Surrey, England join Delaware Valley's students to present a view of a cottage garden in both traditional and contemporary designs. The traditional garden is constructed using the same stone as was used in the house, providing unity throughout. Herbs and blooming plants grow in a natural profusion and are primarily chosen for medicinal purposes and low maintenance. On the modern side, a crisp, clean, display is achieved through distinctive groupings of plants. Emphasis is placed on foliage and bold plantings of bulbs for color.

Our Garden Heritage

Elegant knot gardens, colorful perennials, stately walled gardens and an exquisite formal rose garden greet visitors to this year's Show. The knot garden, a manicured design of begonias, dusty miller and English boxwood leads into a rush of perennials that include pink, blue and white delphiniums, snapdragons and foxglove. Pillars of Rhonda and Golden Shower roses rise above a crop of peachy-pink Sonia roses inside a border of callery pear trees.

Ikebana

The three major schools of Ikebana — Ikenobo, Ohara and Sogetsu are represented in a variety of artistic arrangements. Ikebana is the Japanese art of flower arranging and can be traced back to Shinto nature worship and 6th century floral offerings to Buddha. It involves discipline, a knowledge of rules and forms, artistic insight and an idealized approach to nature.

The Successful Gardener

For a gardener, happiness is success with plants. Success comes, of course, from understanding the plants themselves: how to find them, grow them, design with them, and enjoy them. Horticulture, the Magazine of American Gardening, will expand the horizons of any gardener, beginner or expert.

Each month, America's finest garden writers and photographers lend their assistance and inspiration to every aspect of gardening: indoors and outdoors, vegetables and ornamentals, greenhouses and cold frames, pest control and soil improvement. Always presented in a manner both useful and attractive, Horticulture delights as it informs.

Horticulture is the beautiful and practical gardening magazine for all gardeners and all gardens, city courtyard to country estate. America's successful gardeners have been reading us for 75 years. Why not join them?

Established 1767

U.S. #1 at Route 13, Morrisville, Bucks County, PA. 19067 215-295-1138

With a native understanding of stone from the Italian foothills of the Alps, Pietro Marcolina and his six brothers ventured toward better opportunity in America. In 1918, within ten years of taking port in Philadelphia, they established Marcolina Brothers, Masonry Contractors. Centered in Chestnut Hill, Marcolina Brothers has helped form and restore the classic old world style of homes in the Main Line, Rydal and Jenkintown areas. Their specialized craft has been handed down through the century to sons and apprentices, and the proud, rich quality still exists in every stone they set.

Services available: Stone Work, Brick, Flagstone, Block, Cement and Concrete, Patios, Terraces, Pointing, Waterproofing, Chimney Cleaning, Fireplaces, Landscaping, Stucco, Driveways, Curbs and Footways, Marble Work, Swimming Pools, Lily Ponds, Waterfalls, Lakes and Dams.

DINOSAURS:

AN EXHIBIT IN THE MAKING

A spectacular, unique and fascinating temporary exhibition which enables you to engage in a variety of "hands-on" activities including:

- Dinosaur computer games
- Stuffed dinosaurs, toys and books
- Real dinosaur bones you can touch

PLUS: Watch dinosaur skeletons being assembled for display in the permanent DISCOVERING DINOSAURS exhibition due to open in January 1986.

The Academy's well loved Children's Nature Museum is bigger and better than ever. The all-new, expanded and relocated activity center is now on the 3rd floor and features:

- A working beehive
- Sand dunes
- A flowing stream and waterfall
- An enormous tree to explore
- Live animals

STAR® Quality...

...has been our tradition for nine decades. Back then our work was done by hand, wheelbarrows or mule. And Star Roses were greenhouse grown from cuttings instead of outdoors on today's hardy, vigorous rootstocks.

Today we are abreast of the times—innovating many practices and methods—and automating wherever possible. With all the modern methods we still rely on many "green fingers" and the constant, personal care which brings you Star Roses and other Star Quality plants your parents and grandparents only dreamed about.

When we began growing and selling other hardy ornamental plants our goal stayed the same—to give you the best quality for your money.

Growers of Star® Roses and Star® Quality Plants

And for 1985 we present the hybrid tea rose PRINCESSE DE MONACO specially selected by Her Serene Highness the year before her tragic death. Here is a rose of unique beauty, rich ivory washed with a deep pink blush and a sturdy, vigorous grower. PRINCESSE DE MONACO comes from The House of Meilland who gave us the wonderful PEACE and SONIA roses.

DELAWARE VALLEY COLLEGE

The Leader in Ornamental Horticulture Education

Delaware Valley College is proud to have been chosen to play a special role in the 1985 Philadelphia Flower Show. Our collaborative exhibit with Merrist Wood Agricultural College of Surry. England marks another milestone in our show participation, a tradition spanning over 20 years and highlighted by numerous major awards

Delaware Valley College, recognized as a national leader in Ornamental Horticulture education, with one of the largest and most respected four-year programs in the entire United States.

One key factor in the College's success, not only in Ornamental Horticulture but in its other majors as well, can be traced to its personal, caring brand of education and its small, private college environment

Still another explanation for the College's fine reputation is the success enjoyed by its graduates. At Delaware Valley College, students learn by doing. Graduates enter the work-force with practical hands-on experience, which is a significant advantage in the eyes of prospective employers. A 95° placement of Delaware Valley College graduates attests to their excellent preparation

Other colleges try to imitate these unique qualities Delaware Valley College has been following this educational philosophy for over two decades. Feel free to visit the college anytime but especially during the annual A-Day open house which is held the last weekend in April.

Delaware Valley College is located on Route 202, just south of Doylestown, Pennsulvania

For more information about the College, its majors, financial aid program or athletic teams, write the Director of Admissions. Delaware Valley College, Dovlestown, PA 18901 or call: 215-345-1500

America's Leader In Personal Trusts And Investments

Welcome to Hometown USA

To our great pleasure the Philadelphia Flower Show has for the past couple of years extended far beyond our hometown boundaries. Yet after the Show had reached out to the Orient and to Great Britain in 1983 and 1984 respectively, one of our exhibitors of long standing pointed out that the United States has a glorious horticultural diversity that is often undervalued just because of its great range. We join this exhibitor in the belief that diversity is well worth celebrating as a theme for this year's Show.

Hometown USA is our celebration of America's horticultural breadth. The Show ranges from the wonderful entrance feature, the hometown railroad station and adjoining park, to a penthouse in that biggest hometown of all, New York, from backyards to a stormy luau in a hometown across the sea. The railroad station and park are places of partings and reunions, the architectural and horticultural heartbeat of where we live.

Twenty-four flower arrangers from 20 cities across the United States enthusiastically accepted invitations to come to Philadelphia to create 18 magnificent arrangements for our "Sea To Shining Sea" section of the Show.

We hope you'll stroll through and revive the happy memories of past hometowns and rev up your dreams of future hometowns. Our 52 major exhibitors, hundreds of competitive class exhibitors, and more than 1,000 volunteers and staff, all welcome you to the Philadelphia Flower Show, hometown of some of this nation's earliest and most enterprising horticulturists.

The Greening of Philadelphia

by Ann Jarmusch

It's Philadelphia Green — the community-based gardening program of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society that's growing like the sweetest mint. Philadelphia's fertile mix of ample open space, moderate climate, and plenty of residents with gardening roots has made Philadelphia Green a national model for sustained — and spreading — community gardening. This year, some 1,100 greening projects throughout the city will flourish as neighbors work together under the Philadelphia Green banner.

In South Philadelphia, men and women hungry for spring are hammering wood recycled from skids into window boxes they'll soon fill and hang on every row home on their block. Even the vacant houses will look cared for when their boarded-up windows are painted green and sport garlands of bright annuals supplied for the boxes by Philadelphia Green.

Korean newcomers have missed certain Oriental vegetables not readily available in this new land, so they'll be growing them themselves once frost retreats from their gardens sponsored by Philadelphia Green. Fresh greens hung on the garden fence to dry will eventually travel to family dinner tables, as will Japanese radishes, Chinese cabbage, and yard-long Filipino beans.

Southwest Philadelphia inhabitants craving beauty and shade are organizing to plant gingko trees in front of their homes. Philadelphia Green field workers already helped them select and site this attractive, hardy species and will return to guide the neighbors in the planting and caring for the trees.

"Community greening is so popular because city residents can make immediate visible improvements to their neighborhoods. Neighbors can transform trash-strewn lots into beautiful plots that are also useful; these gardens make city living more amenable," says J. Blaine Bonham, Jr., Philadelphia Green's director. "This greening experience encourages further community activities and creates a sense of self-sufficiency and new goals."

Sometimes the greening of a neighborhood starts with one charismatic and determined gardener who inspires others to take up trowel and rake because his or her flowers are irresistibly beautiful. Other times, it grows out of a need for an inexpensive source of food. Or greening can dovetail with a well-organized neighborhood's own master plan for overall improvement, both physically and in spirit.

Joining Forces

Enter Philadelphia Green, a non-profit program that supports low- and moderate-income neighborhood efforts to make today's urban world of brick, concrete, and asphalt again resemble the "Greene Countrie Towne" William Penn envisioned when he founded Philadelphia on two forested acres three centuries ago. So popular is this program that block or neighborhood groups who indicate their serious interest with petitions, attendance at workshops, and one-time payment of $25 dues may be wait-listed for up to three years before Philadelphia Green can join forces with them.

The roots of community gardening in Philadelphia reach back to the '60's when pioneers with the Neighborhood Garden Association and those of the pocket park program, the Philadelphia Committee of the Garden Club of America and the City of Philadelphia, worked to plant windowboxes and parks in the city. The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society program, which annually adds about 100 new projects to its ranks, has expanded its staff from the original three to 13 full-time and four part-time employees plus eight garden interns to meet the demands of "the green contagion." Having worn out one step-van, Philadelphia Green's replacement green and white Gardenmobile can be seen all over town. This cornucopia on wheels delivers shrubs and young trees, mounds of topsoil and mulch, and glorious annuals and perennials to excited recipients who've cleared the land in anticipation of its arrival. The neighborhood gardening groups do all the gardening, designing, and construction themselves; Philadelphia Green provides bushels of materials and consultations for the first two years. Later they move into a fraternity of gardening groups that receive

The idea is to work with, not dictate to, motivated neighborhood groups, an approach that some participants say is key to Philadelphia Green's phenomenal success. "What would you like in your garden?" is the recurring question posed by staff members, who continually trouble-shoot for the groups. Aiming toward self-reliance, Philadelphia Green also encourages networking among city gardeners both informally and through the friendly competition of the annual Harvest Show and City Gardens Contest.

newsletters, garden visits and other forms of encouragement.

With an attrition rate of only 15% of its participants, Philadelphia Green's program offerings have grown along with the sky-high ambitions of its gardeners. "We've got the flexibility to work with different groups to do the things they want to do," says Bonham, noting that neighborhood needs and energies have propelled the Philadelphia Green staff to keep evolving greening strategies.

Inner-City Impact

"I don't know of any other program that has had as much impact on the inner-city as Philadelphia Green," says Willie Mae Bullock, who a decade ago helped launch the remarkable greening of the 2100 block of North 20th Street. It all started with window boxes, then wine-barrel planters and street trees, and has culminated in two herb and vegetable gardens, a "wild garden," and a charming sitting garden kept lively with gatherings around a barbeque grill made gardening together and collecting compliments on the look of the place. As another measure of their success, they point to adjacent blocks where pockets of green are appearing in response to their ceaseless efforts. And every advance of the green contagion is cause for celebration among the ranks of Philadelphia Green.

Sharon Turner, Bullock's daughter, sold the most tickets to Philadelphia Green's Recognition Dinner one year

Turner also bakes carrot cakes to be sold by the slice to benefit Hope Springs. Of course, Hope Springs gardens provide the carrots — lots of them. States the cook, undaunted, "We only have enough topsoil to grow the short ones."

Every Philadelphia Green group, it seems, has stories to tell. There's one about a woman who dreamed she was being taught how to put up a fence around the community garden and the next day followed the instructions with great success. And reports of a plumber in South Philadelphia who constructed a novel tree guard out of plumbing pipes and fittings.

Volunteers from West Hagert worked until 2 and 3 a.m. laying 5,000 recycled bricks to pave Glenwood Court at 2026 Glenwood Street. And before Philadelphia Green had its own auger, residents of Hope Springs dug tree holes three grueling feet deep and then feasted triumphantly together on homemade chili and cornbread.

Bonham recalls the stunning effect neighborhood organizer, Mamie Nichols, produced at a meeting when she announced, "We represent 88 blocks, and we want to green up every one."

Now, several years and countless gardening hours later, those 88 blocks in Point Breeze, between Broad Street and the Schuylkill River in South Philadelphia, are glistening green in more than 70 different gardening projects. And the gardeners aren't finished yet.

Reaching Critical Mass

One day when Bonham and colleagues were surveying the concentrations of green pins indicating active gardening projects on their city map, it occurred to them that some neighborhoods were reaching "critical mass" in greening. Sections of the city were being from scrap subway grills and bed railings.

"Hope Springs" is the name she and her fellow gardeners gave their first garden on an empty, trash-strewn lot, and eventually to the entire green block, a name they say has proven prophetic now that 90% of the residents are and won for Hope Springs her choice of several prizes. Her pick: a truckload of wood chips. "And it was a mountain of them, believe me," says the current chair of Philadelphia Green's Advisory Board, comprised of nearly 50 local community gardening leaders.

transformed, their boundaries defined, wherever gardeners left their mark. Philadelphia Green had always applauded both fledgling and outstanding gardening efforts with awards ceremonies, but here was a new opportunity to encourage those gardeners who "greened up" every curb, every window, every lot, every inch of urban dirt available to them. Why not recognize such achievement in this city of neighborhoods with the venerable "Greene Countrie Towne" designation?

So far, three communities have been so named amid fanfare created as much by the jubilant gardeners themselves as by the presence of the Mayor and local television crews. Attractive signs provided by Philadelphia Green officially mark the boundaries and gardens of the Greene Countrie Townes: Point Breeze (where a gardener decorated one sign with a horseshoe), West Hagert in North Philadelphia, and West Shore in Southwest Philadelphia. Other neighborhoods are striving to attain this pinnacle in a market what Bonham believes is a unique concept among this country's community gardening programs.

Perseverance, ingenuity, and luck are only part of the urban gardening story. And its ramifications extend well beyond beautification. You don't have to dig very far below the surface of most community greening activities to find that citizens who are organized are working on several fronts to improve their neighborhoods, some of them involving City Hall.

"You can sit back and talk about what you wish the City would do, but I think it's a lot more gratifying to do for yourself," says Helen Feggans, president of the West Shore Federation, the moving force behind the newest Greene Countrie Towne, which covers 10 magnificent blocks. "West Shore has been noticed by officials providing services because we have taken things into our own hands."

When Feggans moved onto her block, only seven houses were inhabited. Now just six remain vacant and three of them are being renovated through the Neighborhood Housing Network and the Enterprise Foundation, and the rest are slated for rehabilitation. All of the houses gleam with paint provided by the Sun Company. Streets have been resurfaced by the City, with new curbs and sidewalks requested.

Identical carriage-style lamps on posts brighten and unify the look of Paschall Avenue, which dead-ends into a garden with peach trees for picnics and a 15,000 square-foot, hillside vegetable garden. And two muddy driveways are now paved following a simple telephone request that brought concrete from a private contractor who otherwise would have dumped his excess concrete at the end of the day.

The biggest threat to Philadelphia's patches of Eden is not insects, vandals, or auto emissions. It's the red-orange zoning notices that occasionally appear nailed to a garden post informing community gardeners that the Redevelopment Authority has other plans for the land. Gardeners and Philadelphia Green representatives are working to avoid this clash of purposes and have gone to extremes to move plants in and out of holding areas or to shift activities to nearby sites when garden space is reappropriated.

both temporary as well as permanent open space uses" was adopted by the commission "in recognition of the importance of garden areas within the context of the urban environment." Certainly, Philadelphia Green has other allies in City government. When he was managing director, Mayor W. Wilson Goode told assembled gardeners, "There's no place like Philadelphia; there's no organization like Philadelphia Green."

Today, funding for Philadelphia Green comes from a combination of Energy and enthusiasm is welcome in a community garden.

Disappointments have run deep, but now Point Breeze's Mamie Nichols sits on the Philadelphia City Planning Commission. Last June, her resolution calling for "the setting aside of vacant land for public and private resources, but the initial modest program was started with revenues generated through the Philadelphia Flower Show. Gradually its success attracted grants from local foundations and in 1978 Philadelphia Green received its first funding from the City of Philadelphia's Office of Housing and Community Development. "Every Flower Show visitor contributes to this powerful beautification program," notes Jane Pepper, Pennsylvania Horticultural Society president, "and we are also endlessly grateful to continuing support from the City government and from a growing list of supporters, some corporations and foundations and many private citizens."

As for the future, the program shows no sign of slowing its phenomenal growth. This fiscal year, without solicitation from Philadelphia Green, its funding from the City's Office of Community Development was increased to launch a new gardening program for the residents of four City-run public housing complexes. In addition, multi-year grants from The J. N. Pew, Jr. Charitable Trust and The William Penn Foundation will support additional program expansion to meet the Society's challenge to green all of Philadelphia.

The green contagion is now stretching over state lines, as community leaders from as far away as Columbia, South Carolina; Louisville, Kentucky; and Dayton, Ohio have asked Philadelphia Green for its community gardening secrets.

These leaders have undoubtedly caught the fever, like West Shore's Helen Feggans, who insists, "When we talk about rehabilitation, we're talking about greening. Greening is a large part of the way a neighborhood should look. We are absolutely committed to it and definitely are going to see it work."

Ann Jarmusch writes about gardening and other arts for national and regional publications including the Inquirer, Chicago Tribune and ARTnews. She was formerly associate editior of Réalités Magazine.

Orchids in the Storm at the Philadelphia Flower Show

by Allen Lacy

Last year, it took no little ingenuity and head-scratching for Walt and Bill Off to figure out how their family business could keep to its long tradition of spectacular exhibits at the annual Philadelphia Flower Show. The family business is raising tropical orchids, plants that didn't seem to fit the Show's 1985 theme, "A Touch of Britain." Undaunted, however, the Off brothers did come up with an appropriate idea: a replica of a patch of tropical rainforest where a British orchid-hunter had set up a plant-collecting station. Waldor Orchids once again delighted the visitors to the Show, eager for the sight of a floral extravaganza at winter's end.

This year, Waldor has another treat in store for visitors — a "Storm Over the Luau." The Offs and some 25 friends from the Philadelphia area spent a week at the Civic Center setting up before the Show opened. They transported hundreds of orchid plants in full bloom — cattleyas, cymbidiums, miltonias, and many other genera from the collection in Waldor's complex of seven large greenhouses in Linwood, a town near the coast of southern New Jersey. This time, special effects dramatize the alreadydramatic orchid display: thunder rumbles in the distance, exotic jungle birds squawk, lightning flashes, water rushes over a small waterfall, and raindrops splash.

Preliminary planning for this spectacular display took place long ago: the Offs are accustomed to thinking about their exhibit at the Show years in advance. The actual work got underway last November, with the gathering of sassafras and wild cherry limbs, which serve as the framework of the display, even though they are concealed by moss, cork, and broad leafed evergreens. The Sunday before the Show opened, the Offs and their friends began the arduous task of hanging the cables from the Civic Center ceiling needed to support their exhibit. By Thursday, the scenery (the waterfall and a mountain made of metal scaffolding covered with black cloth) was in place, and the first trucks began to arrive from Linwood carrying pots of orchids. On Friday, the jungle birds began to squawk and the thunder to rumble - special effects left in the hands of the Off's young friends from Philadelphia, Wayne, Ralph and Douglas Trautman, who spent several months designing the sounds and lights necessary to produce a "Storm Over the Luau.'

As usual, I will visit the Show, in part to see what Waldor Orchids, which was founded and is still partially operated by George A. Off, the father of Walt and Bill and five other sons, has done this time around. But I count myself especially fortunate in that I live in Linwood, just down the street from Waldor. It's open to the public on Saturday mornings and on afternoons from Tuesday through Friday. I make a pilgrimage there almost once a week to see what's in bloom, and I'm never disappointed. The Offs display their orchids on their home territory with the same panache that makes their annual exhibits in Philadelphia such favorites with the fans.

The five rear greenhouses at Waldor are generally closed, but there's enough in the other two to occupy a visitor's attention for a couple of hours. In one house, monsteras and other tropical vines clamber up the thick bole of a cork oak. A waterfall spills over huge boulders to a calm pool below, ringed with lush green ferns. The air is saturated with the fragrance - like vanilla or like coconut - of some of the potted orchids displayed for sale, at prices starting at $12.50. In the other house, hundreds of orchids in bloom crowd the benches and hang from the water pipes above. Some cost as much as $2500. Others, plants used in Waldor's program of hybridization to develop newer and better cultivars, are not for sale at any price. But all are lovely, and they make a colorful ensemble of crimsons and maroons and purples and almost all other colors of the spectrum except true blue.

George Off lives just a few yards away from his greenhouses, in a Tudor-style house he designed and built himself in the late 1920s, a house with dark stone walls, half-timbering, and a roof of red and gray slate, now so deeply hidden by the surrounding grove of hemlocks and yews and cedars of Lebanon that it seems almost enchanted. Like many people whose lives have been spent in horticulture, Mr. Off seems much younger than his years. At 80, he is vigorous and healthy. His thoughts focus on Waldor's present and its future, but he is willing to talk about its history and his own.

He came in his teens from his native Merion, Pa. to Atlantic City, where his grandfather owned the Strand Hotel and his father the Brighton. They hoped he would follow in their footsteps as hoteliers, but after he gave it a year's try and disliked it, his father urged him to pursue the horticultural interests that had been his passion since childhood. He gave George and a brother several acres of the farm the family owned in Linwood, then a rural community. Off and his brother went into the wholesale florist business, but went their separate ways in the early 1950s, when the company was divided into two different firms — Waldor and Brighton Farms. Brighton Farms is now entirely a wholesale grower of orchids and not open to the public. The two businesses are separated by a narrow alley.

Orchids were not George Off's first love. He began by raising roses, carnations, lilies, and other staples of the wholesale florist trade. The business thrived, since his close proximity to Atlantic City gave him an edge over other growers who had to ship their wares by rail. But he always had trouble around Easter. At that time, any man who didn't give his wife an orchid corsage for Easter was in hot water, Off recalls. The wholesale florists who sold orchids at Easter demanded that retailers also buy their roses and carnations and lilies from them in that holiday season. Off solved his problem at first by buying orchids as cut flowers from one grower who grew nothing else. Then he bought some orchid plants of his own - and the passion for orchids hit him. He began importing different orchid species from South and Central America, and he began to hybridize orchids extensively.

Everything prospered — until World War II. Almost all of the Offs' workers were drafted, only two left to tend 52,000 square feet of greenhouses. Fuel rationing was imposed except for essential items, a category that excluded orchids. The Offs' major crop became greenhouse tomatoes, a move that gave him just enough fuel to keep his most valuable orchids alive, growing alongside the more essential vegetables. He began raising cattle for milk and for beef, but soon after the war ended, rising land prices and taxes left the old Off farm a casualty to suburbia. Today teenagers laugh and splash in swimming pools on land that once had known only the low mooing of cows and the whisper of breezes rustling the cattails and reeds at the edge of the salt marsh.

"I knew it would be impossible to keep that land for farming," George Off says today. "Development was inevitable, and the pressures in that direction were enormous. But I enjoyed farming while I could. I had the experience and fun of doing some things I wanted to do—breeding orchids, raising cows. The cows are now history. But my sons and I still have those orchids, and they're still lots of fun for us all."

It's left to Bill and Walt Off to talk about the immediate past and the fore-seeable future of Waldor and the orchid business in general. They spot two trends, which are actually present realities destined to become more and more important.

One is mericlonal propagation of orchids, also known as "tissue culture" or "cloning." This method of propagation is more and more widely used with plants such as orchids and the newer hostas, which increase slowly if left to their own devices and which command high prices. A tiny piece of tissue is repeatedly dissected, grown under sterile conditions in a laboratory with appropriate hormones and nutrients, until there are thousands of exact duplicates of the parent plant growing in glass flasks until they can be transplated. Tissue-culture benefits no one more than it does the lover of orchids, who can acquire thereby a plant for $15, instead of $1500 or more, and in a few years rather than almost a lifetime. An additional benefit of mericloning one to which Waldor's own laboratory has contributed not a little - is that it helps eliminate the viral diseases that plagued orchid stocks in the U.S. not long ago.

Another trend is what Walt and Bill Off call "miniaturization," the selective breeding of small cultivars of cattleyas, notorious space hogs among orchids. On greenhouse benches that once held 200 to 300 such cattleyas, 3000 of the new "mini-cats" (as they are called) can now be grown, saving enormously on space and thus fuel costs. Mini-cats, according to the Offs, may be short in stature, but they're long on loveliness.

"Storm over the Luau" is a dilly. I would recommend that everyone who has seen and admired the Waldor exhibits at the Philadelphia Show beat it over to Linwood right away, except for one thing. I don't like crowds.

From Sea to Shining Sea

24 Arrangers Arrive from 20 Cities across the United States Courtesy of AT&T

by Anne S. Cunningham

From elegant floral displays in the White House to homegrown weeds in the fist of a two year old, flowers are a vital part of life throughout the United States. To some people, Hometown USA suggests flowers entwined in a white picket fence, to others big city elegance with formal arrangements. Exploring the variety inherent in the 1986 Philadelphia Flower Show theme, 24 award-winning flower arrangers have gathered from around the country to create personal exhibits representing their hometowns. Entitled "From Sea to Shining Sea," this exhibit reflects regional horticulture interpreted by designers using native elements.

It's difficult to imagine how flower arrangers travel great distances laden with delicate flowers, cumbersome greens, containers, and tools. The plant material can't be put in luggage compartments of planes, where it would be thrown about and freeze. So boxes of carefully packed flowers and foliage are fed through metal detectors, stuffed under airline seats, crammed into overhead baggage compartments, or carried on the laps of dedicated arrangers.

Tropicals on the East Coast

Kitty Dillingham and Sally Moore, from Hawaii, have the most challenging task. Once they find a way to circumvent tough Hawaiian and Californian agricultural customs inspectors, they have to figure out how to put plants like the giant heliconia, with stiff banana-like leaves up to 6 feet tall, in an airplane's overhead luggage compartment. In addition to their own jet lag, they have to take into account what temperature change, time, and travel will do to their tropical vegetation. The transition from a sunny Hawaiian garden to a raw March wind in Philadelphia can't be easy for people or plants.

In Hawaii, Kitty Dillingham and Sally Moore (pink shirt) experiment with heliconia in anticipation of the Philadelphia Flower Show.

Once they are safely in the Civic Center, the flowers and massive foliage of lush Hawaiian rainforests will be ideal for the large format requirements of the class "From Sea to Shining Sea": two pedestals in front of a 6 ft. by 6 ft. square painted backdrop. Dillingham and Moore are accustomed to making arrangements as large as 8 and 9 ft. tall as part of a commitment to the Honolulu Academy of Art. "It's a great tradition," says Dillingham. "We have no budget for arrangements, so our friends call when they're ready to cut flowers from their spacious gardens. We never know what flowers we'll have to work with from week to week, but it always works out." Instead of pin holders, frogs, or oasis, they use a base of rocks in the bottom of their containers to hold giant leaves and heavy flower stems that can be several inches wide. "Do we need to bring rocks from Hawaii, or can we find some in Philadelphia?" ask the arrangers. Every detail of their exhibit must be considered before they make the 4,000 mile trip.

An Air-Conditioned Hearse

The strong verticals and deep colors of the Hawaiian arrangement are in distinct contrast to Norma Sutherland's horizontal representation of her hometown, Shawnee Mission, Kansas. She sees her midwestern section of the country in terms of vast expanses of pale prairie grass, flowing wheat fields, and giant sunflowers.

How to find a field of living prairie grass in March, or a sunflower in full bloom, puzzles Sutherland more than transportation problems. Creative methods of transporting flowers are an amusing challenge, she claims, recounting the story of a southern gentleman who took his prize-winning long stemmed roses to a steamy spring flower show in an air conditioned hearse. Sutherland started last summer on the sunflower search. To get just one sunflower for the Philadelphia Flower Show, she planted seeds in early fall, and requested friends in Kansas and Philadelphia to do the same. If any are successful, then she has to decide how to get them to the Show.

Norma Sutherland, on a recent trip to an English garden, searches for new plants to add to her Kansas gardens.

Sutherland grew up in Colorado, "in arid ranch country where it was hard to get anything to grow. When I married and moved to Kansas," she says, "things grew so well, it was just a joy." She became a prolific grower, and as a logical extension, a flower arranger. Like many of the participants in the exhibit, Sutherland studied Ikebana to learn the traditions and essentials revered in the Japanese art of flower arranging. Her personal style of arranging has changed over the years, she says, "because it's important to progress and do abstracts; it's a challenge to try new techniques."

Recently, Sutherland's horticultural emphasis has shifted to foliage. She grows a tremendous variety of gray, green, and variegated foliage in her gardens and greenhouse at home, and encourages novices to use common flowers effectively within a design, and not rely solely on the unusual for effect.

No Dormant Season

Edwina Winter of Beaumont, Texas, focuses her horticultural efforts on tropical foliage for arrangements. Less than 20 miles from the Gulf of Mexico, on the Louisianna border, Beaumont is hot and humid, with no dormant season. Winter grows cacti and succulents, a dozen different philodendrons, alocasias, and a variety of blooming bromeliads, which she considers "very architectural; they have different forms and hold up well in arrangements." Weathered wood in her exhibit reflects the lumber industry's dominance in the town of Beaumont, where pine is an economic staple.

Like most of the talented people participating in this exhibit, Winter uses her horticultural expertise in related fields. She is on the Beaumont Texas Highway Beautification Committee, helping city employees choose the right landscape plants for large areas of southeastern Texas recently developed. Winter is also an accredited Flower Show Judge for arrangements, with two national organizations, the Garden Club of America and the Federated Garden Clubs of America. She has judged at the Philadelphia Flower Show for the past five years.

Kathryn Coke Rienhoff, from Baltimore, comes to the Philadelphia Flower Show with the kind of plants most familiar to eastern Flower Show visitors: delicate spring flowers, daffodils and tulips, dogwood and cherry blossoms. To depict her area of the country, Rienhoff favors the monuments of Washington D.C. with an optimistic blue sky background.

Years of art school and an interior decorating business complement Rienhoff's talent as a flower arranger. She lectures in Baltimore, Washington, and the Beltway area, on creative arranging with emphasis on color and flair. In her talks, she advocates using oasis for short term arrangements because it allows an infinite variety of angles for placing flowers. For home arrangements or displays that should last, however, she cautions against using material or bases that can clog a stem and shorten the life of a cut flower.

Rienhoffs theatrical approach to flower arranging, incorporating a colorful dramatic background panel with a carefully staged monument and coordinated foreground flowers is a personal style. All the interpretations "From Sea to Shining Sea" are of outstanding quality; the variety of material, point of view, and hometown touches are what make them special.

Anne Cunningham writes on gardening subjects. Her work appeared recently in The Philadelphia Inquirer annual Garden Guide.

Thanks to AT&T

An exhibit of this magnitude would not be possible without the sponsorship of AT&T. Their participation and recognition of the Philadelphia Flower Show reflect continuing community support. "We consider the Flower Show a tremendous asset to Philadelphia," says Walter Fisher Jr., an area vice president for AT&T Information Systems, who annually enters and wins ribbons in the Show's horticultural classes.

Coordinating the Exhibit

The 18 arrangements, created by 24 designers will each be divided into three days, Saturday March 8, Tuesday March 11, or Friday March 14. Georgraphical distribution, visual contrast, and variety of plant material are just a few of the factors that determine the days on which the displays appear.

Coordinating the Flower Show staff, volunteers, and out of town participants for this exhibit is akin to managing a presidental campaign. Philadelphia's Jane Ward took on the job and with all the skill of a campaign manager, Ward juggled the needs, desires, schedules and problems of the 24 visiting arrangers. For the week of the Flower Show, each visitor has two local volunteers to help with everything from hotel accommodations to last minute flowers. Ward has a smile and a large phone bill.

Just about a year ago, Katherine Beatty and Martha Law, talented arrangers themselves, met to discuss nationally recognized arrangers who could meet the challenge of this demanding exhibit. The eagerness with which arrangers accepted invitations to participate attests to the national recognition of the Philadelphia Flower Show.

PENNSTATE HORTICULTURE

Education

Penn State's student Hort Show gets more popular all the time and this year drew more than 36,000 visitors. Profits support student trips and activities.

Undergraduate degree programs in horticulture are strong. Students can major in horticultural business and industry, crop production, or horticultural science.

Graduate programs are nationally recognized, and doctorate and master's degree students participate in departmental or interdisciplinary research. Some combine their work in horticulture with study in agronomy, genetics, plant physiology, plant pathology, or other related disciplines.

In addition, Penn State offers a unique technical program in Ornamental Nursery Management.

For information about the College of Agriculture, contact Dr. James S. McCoy, director of undergraduate student affairs, 217 Ag Administration Building, University Park, PA 16802, Tel. (814) 865-7521, or contact your county Penn State Cooperative Extension Service.

Extension

Penn State is a pioneer in urban gardening programs and a community resource for home gardeners. Faculty and staff prepare news and educational programs on sound horticulture practices and coordinate a statewide Master Gardener program.

The Penn State Cooperative Extension Service holds conferences, seminars, and workshops in many management areas of horticulture, including marketing, cultural practices, disease control, soil management, weed control, safe pesticide uses, and production environments for flowers vegetables, fruits, and ornamentals.

Research

In the 1960s Penn State researchers created Nittany Lion Red, the first commercially successful geranium grown from seed. In the 1970s specialist propagators were able to use Penn State's indexing techniques to produce quality geraniums free from bacteria, viruses, and fungi.

Research in horticulture at Penn State employs biotechnology and genetic engineering to create new plant varieties and to improve existing ones for commercial growers and home gardeners.

Penn State is known worldwide for the development of greenhouse energy conservation systems. Other current research includes propagation of perennial plants, tissue and cell cloning of woody plants, hydroponic production of strawberries, plant nutrition, variety selection, and weed control.

Robert Montgomery Landscape Nursery Team Designs the Central Exhibit

by Bonnie J. S. Day

"I've never found two designers who agree on much of anything," admits Rob Montgomery with a smile. Yet it is just that creative, contentious environment that works for the design team of Robert Montgomery Landscape Nursery when they create a landscape for the Philadelphia Flower Show. This year, the five-member team went into a huddle to produce the central exhibit for the 1986 Show: Hometown USA. Featuring a railroad station leading to a small colorful city park, the exhibit symbolizes homecoming for visitors.

Five landscape designers working on one project? Most other designers would shake their heads and walk away. But, for this talented group — Steve Campbell, Carolyn Hegeler, Nursery owner Rob Montgomery, Lance Mozer, and Bruce Rawlings — their unique approach is what makes their competitive exhibits stronger. Not only do they benefit from the collective wisdom of five experienced landscape designers, the highly-charged, creative nature of the group's interaction keeps the ideas fresh and their execution innovative.

To prevent creativity from turning into chaos, however, an order is imposed on the way the group works. They use a system more like a constitutional monarchy than a democracy. "Prime minister" Bruce Rawlings, heads the design team and coordinates with the rest of the Nursery staff, and "head of state" Rob Montgomery, takes care of the administrative aspects of participating in the Show. The ebullient nurseryman, Montgomery, who has translated his experience in business administration to the world of nursery management, keeps his design team on track.

"If I hadn't gotten them started, we wouldn't have begun work on this project until December, just a few months before the Show," he laughs. Work on the exhibit actually began early in 1985, when the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society asked Montgomery to take it on. They were asking a lot. The central exhibit, one of the most important design features of the entire Show, requires one full year to prepare. It involves a great deal of work, all of which is added to the designers' already heavy everyday responsibilities. To take the exhibit from concept to completion, the group spends long hours developing four separate schematic drawings that specify every detail of the exhibit. They also prepare working drawings telling construction crews exactly what to build, what plants for search for, what props and construction materials are needed, and a detailed installation plan for the week before the Show.

A Designer's Stew

Making a successful Flower Show exhibit is like nothing so much as concocting a flavorful stew with many different ingredients: a good design, the right plants, authentic construction details and props, and skillful translation of the design to the three dimensional reality of the Civic Center.

The "cooks" begin by listing all of the design elements they'd like to see in the exhibits: water, fragrance, color, and sound, for example. The Montgomery Landscape Show design committee assigns the space they'll be working with and a design feature, the railroad station. Bruce Rawlings picks and chooses from this smorgasbord of ideas, incorporating as many of them as he realistically can in his preliminary sketch. His concept is then revised and refined by the group.

Plants suitable for use in a Flower Show exhibit are hard to find. The scale of the exhibit is smaller than life, and the woody plants must give the impression of maturity and size before they have actually reached that point. The designers are further limited to plants that can be forced, are readily available, and of a size and weight that can be accommodated in the Nursery's forcing structures. Add to that the personal preferences of five different plant lovers, and you can imagine how difficult it can be to satisfy everyone. What they do is determine the basic shapes and types of plants the design requires. Then they fill in the blanks with plants that meet all of their specifications.

The designers know they will be using the good performers: azaleas, rhododendrons, flowering cherries, crabapples, birches, and cut evergreen trees. They'll also be trying more difficult plants like sweet bay magnolias, and willows, a first for them this year. Locating these plants for March bloom can be a challenge. Many of them are found on shopping trips one or two of the designers take, hunting for Flower Show material. Others the Nursery may already have. Some of them aren't located until the very last minute; occasionally the design must be changed because a key plant can't be found.

Scavenging for Authenticity

Important as the plants are to the execution of the design, they serve another purpose. They help create the mood of the exhibit and set the time and place in which it is meant to exist. In this way they are part of another important aspect of the design: construction details and props. These details are what lend an air of authenticity to the scene. Everything that is built, planted or used in the exhibit has been chosen to evoke the era the designers envisioned, that of a railroad station and small city park built in the 1940's.

People have been the best source of information about how the structures and plantings should look, claims Rawlings. He also took the time to visit and photograph old railroad stations.

"Hometown USA"

Nursery workers erect supports for a new greenhouse, built especially to hold some of the plants needed for this year's exhibit. Large trees will be laid on their sides and forced into leaf and bloom by carefully regulating temperature, light, and humidity in this plastic house.

Books, catalogs, and other photographs provide more clues. The result of their research is a scavenger hunt-style list of materials and objects that everyone helps track down. Lights and signs gleaned from a railroad auction, Rawlings' own brass instruments, donations from friendly antique buffs, all are part of the exhibit's final impression.

Some things can't be found — they have to be faked. "You can do a lot with paint," is the exhibit designers' creed. With a little pigment, a plywood roof with simulated seams becomes one made of tin. What matters in an exhibit this size is to make it as realistic and functional as possible without breaking the budget.

Those are the sort of details the designers work on during January and February, the only time they have to concentrate exclusively on the Flower Show. They're also trying to anticipate the problems that inevitably crop up in the eleventh hour. "Every year the Flower Show provides you with an unexpected turn of events," says Montgomery. "It always happens at the last minute, when it's almost too late to correct it." Will a major plant refuse to bloom? Will be entire crop of astilbe wither and die?

Nobody really knows, but they try to prepare for catastrophe by having back-up plants and being as organized as possible about what they can control. Rawlings, who oversees the week-long installation of the exhibit, prepares a flow chart, describing when plants and construction materials will be delivered, where in the Civic Center they will go, who will be doing what, and when they will be doing it. Things still go wrong in the friendly hurly-burly of set-up week for the Show, but it could be worse.

Putting together an exhibit is like painting a picture, says Rob Montgomery. No matter how carefully the exhibit is planned, it still comes together differently in the Civic Center. Some color combinations don't work under the Center's artificial light; the shape of a plant or planting, perfect on paper, may be all wrong in a three-dimensional context. The designers come to the Civic Center on different days to help Rawlings direct the construction and improvise necessary changes. The final creative details of the design belong to him: when no one can agree where a prop goes or how a plant should be positioned, he has the last word. Often the decision is a compromise, based on what the construction crew can do and what the designers would like to see.

Even after the exhibit is completed and the Flower Show opens, the designers will still be at work, critiquing the design. All of them take turns staffing the exhibit, answering visitors' questions and seeing the exhibit through their eyes. What the design team learns in 1986 will be remembered and put to use in 1987.

"The Flower Show exhibit is a rallying point for the whole year, a very creative mark in time for us," says Montgomery. Bruce Rawlings adds that he values the camaraderie the Show creates with people from nurseries and other horticultural groups. Participating also gives the group the opportunity to show the public what they can do as landscape designers while bringing to life some of their favorite fantasies. It is to the credit of these five talented individuals that they are able to work together so well, to mold their own dreams into a cohesive whole. Next year, Montgomery and his team expect to be back in the competition, using their cooperative style to create another vital, stimulating design.

The Competitive Classes of the Philadelphia Flower Show

In 1986, exhibitors entered 236 Competitive Classes: Niches, Pedestals, Rooms & Tables, Miniature Arrangements, Miniature Rooms, Designs for Pressed Plant Material, Gardens, Terraces and Entryways and Horticulture.

You Too Can Enter the Competitive Classes at the Philadelphia Flower Show

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society mails an exhibitor's schedule and guide to all PHS members in September. If you are not a member and wish to receive a schedule, write to Flower Show Secretary, Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, 325 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, PA 19106.

The 1986 Philadelphia Flower Show Major Exhibitors

Throughout the last year, these major exhibitors have been planning and planting, forcing and flowering to welcome you to spring and to Hometown USA. Tons of blossoms, trees and sod have been blended to create the warm memory and present pleasure of our Hometowns. Walk through and revel in the colors and designs. We hope you'll be inspired to recreate some things in your own gardens.

as we join friends in a backyard barbecue nestled among birch, rhododendrons and evergreens. A relaxing spot for enjoying poolside activities. Our senses are delighted by the sights and sounds of a waterfall set naturally among cedars, mountain laurel and azaleas. A manicured lawn pulls together the natural elements of this setting. The stage lifts our spirits as we toast good food, good friends and an enjoyable afternoon.

The Fragrant Year

Use of fragrance adds another, often overlooked, dimension to the color and delicate form of flowers. This display introduces visitors to the horticultural lore surrounding aromatic plants. Colorful clumps of daphnes and sweetpeas intermingled with fragrant hyacinths and honeysuckle fill the air with their delightful scents.

Christine's Garden

An enchanting garden designed and scaled to a child's world. The entrance to the playhouse is discovered through an evergreen maze, an intriguing challenge, rewarded with a piece of fresh fruit. The playhouse features tiny furniture, toys and pretty dolls for Christine to entertain her friends. A boxwoodlined path leads to another play area of maypole dancing and a rose-covered bower with a small bench completes the magical fantasy. Annuals, perennials, shrubs and flowering trees surround the children with beauty to appreciate, to learn about and to enjoy. Christine, a lucky grandchild indeed.

Workers of the Pine Barrens
In their search for food and a place to live, the Pine Barrens beavers have dammed up a stream. Flooded low areas have formed a pond in which they have built their lodge. The exhibit incorporates much of the plant life indigenous to the Pine Barrens — birch, ferns, swamp pink, pitcher plants, sundew, laurel, partridge berry, and cedar, to name a few. The exhibit shows how the beavers have changed the area to suit their needs for food and a home.

Hometown Hilo

A spellbinding display of exotic orchids is set amidst a volcanic paradise. The lore of Hilo comes to life with molten streams of lava snaking down a hill of lava rock. The steam rises gently through the rock conjuring up images of an island formed some 25 million years ago. Tropical plants used in the exhibit were flown from Hilo, Hawaii.

The Shady Side of Town

Here a shady area sparkles with color. Many hometowns have shaded spaces that yearn for excitement and using plants with colorful foliage provides the perfect solution. Hostas are a primary feature in this display of contrasting foliage. The plant originated in Japan and is displayed in colors of traditional variegated green and white and magnificent shades of blue and yellow. Evergreens and other low maintenance flowering plants show the variety of plants available for shady areas.

All American Garden

Vegetables, colorful and crisp, brighten this typical American garden. Many of the varieties are all America Selections with a scattering of herbs and flowers for contrast. The display shows plants from greenhouse seedlings to coldframe and finally planted in garden beds. An attractive fence aids in keeping curious garden varmints out.

Vick's Wildgardens, Inc. Conshohocken State Road, Box 11 Gladwyne, PA 19035 Alfred F.W. Vick, Jr., Chair

Our Little Home

Using a before and after concept, this display shows an old house and neglected garden on one side and a refurbished home and beautifully planted garden on the other. A small terrace designed for relaxation overlooks a natural setting of wildflowers, ferns, trees and shrubs. A waterfall and pond provide movement and soothing sounds to an overall practical, economical and livable design.

Waldor Orchids 10 E. Poplar Avenue Linwood, NJ 08221 Walter Off, Chair

Storm Over the Luau

A passing thunderstorm interrupts this tropical Hawaiian luau with clashing thunder and lightning and a soaking rain. Thousands of orchids, ferns and tropical plants tremble as the ensuing storm makes its way across the display. The technology of the computer is behind all of this fanciful wizardry in a display that will send you fleeing for cover.

A Hand-in-Hand Company Profile

Contributor: Robert P. Hauptfuhrer.

Occupation: President of Sun Exploration and Production Co. in Dallas; group vice president of Sun Company in Philadelphia, where he has worked for 28 years.

Community Activities: Served as a trustee of Lankenau Hospital, a director of Curtis Institute of Music and on United Way campaign policy committee.

Personal Interests: Enjoys golf and tennis with his wife, Barbara, and shares a family interest in skiing. Also active in alumni affairs for Princeton and Harvard.

Insurance Company: The Philadelphia Contributionship, the nation's oldest property insurer.

Bob Hauptfuhrer's Comments: "My father bought his first Contributionship policy in the 1920s, and every house I have lived in has been covered by this company. When I first bought a fire policy in 1963, I was attracted by the dividends. Recently, we purchased Perpetual Homeowners coverage which is a valuable investment—one my father would have liked."

Create the environment and you'll create the idea.

Of course, sometimes it's the other way around. We think the Flower Show is one of the ideas that makes Philadelphia a great environment to work in.

We've been working here for over 100 years. We're proud of that, and we're proud to be supporting a good idea like the Flower Show.

How you can turn a rather dull, ordinary room into a really hip, swinging scene.

OR CREATE ANY MOOD FROM QUIET SIMPLICITY TO AN EXOTIC PARADISE — ALL ON A SHORT-TERM RENTAL BASIS.

You can do it with plants — and The Philadelphia Plant Rental Company.

Plants can transform a room from something ordinary into a beautiful setting for a party, wedding reception or social event of any kind.

Plants are functional too. They can direct the flow of traffic. Visually lower ceilings. Accent areas or displays. Provide attractive camouflage. Add warmth, life, and even help bring out the color of a room.

When you need plants for a social event, we're the people to call. We're the only people in the area who make short-term plant rentals our full-time business.

We're experienced in planning and design, so call early. We can make creative suggestions — and help you avoid costly mistakes.

We pick up and deliver 24 hours a day, seven days a week. so call any time: (215) 492-9200. And let us help make your next event a swinging success.

Our Palette Has Many Colors...

Do you know us? We've designed and installed some of the areas' loveliest landscapes. Our work features extended color in foliage, stems and fruits - and a wide selection of Pennsylvania-hardy perennials.

Some of our favorite shrubs are evergreens that turn crimson, yellow and plum in Fall and Winter. Adding a glossy-leaved planting now and again brings the element of light to

Over the last twelve years we've developed the agility needed to match a family's taste and life-style requirements — with landscaping of understated grace and style.

Our business quadrupled since 1979. And, we have the capacity to serve you, landscape afficianado, by or before this Fall. Call me today for a free estimate or consultation. Our courteous, proficient service will make you feel good.

Sincerely. Lay Steinley

The sweet smell of success in Ornamental Horticulture begins at Delaware Valley College...

"Scents form the Garden" is the theme of Delaware Valley College's entry in the 1986 Flower Show...but there's another scent in the air all year' round at Delaware Valley College. It's the sweet smell of success.

Within six months of commencement 98% of all Delaware Valley College graduates are employed, with 74% working in the field of their major. A nationally recognized faculty, facilities among the best anywhere in the nation, plus an extensive 24 week "hands on" program give Ornamental Horticulture graduates (and other majors, too) an extra edge to move ahead and stay ahead of the competion. Talk with any student or faculty member at the show...or visit Delaware Valley College on route 202 just south of Doylestown, PA. You'll see why this college was the number one choice of so many who are "making it big" in Ornamental Horticulture today. For even more information,

One of Chestnut Hill's colonial landmarks just entered the Victorian era.

There's always been a timeless beauty to Robertson's floral showroom. Now, that's even more true. We've added a spectacular Victorian-style glass conservatory to our restored 18th century building. It's a unique greenhouse facility for exotic plants of many sizes and origins, all in the setting of an English botanical garden. We invite you to visit it and take home some timeless beauty of your own.

You can't see the fence that makes a "Good Dog" out of me.

The Invisible Fence.

I won't jump over it ... I can't dig under it ... and my neighbors can't even see it. With the Invisible Fence, I stay safely at home day and night, winter and summer, rain or shine ... without a leash or a kennel. Invisible Fence is a simple Pavlovian canine containment system. University tested for safety. Approved by SPCA's and recommended by vets and trainers. Guaranteed to work safely and effectively — at a fraction of the cost of chain link fence — or your money back. The Invisible Fence is a "good deal" for a "good dog!"

With a native understanding of stone from the Italian foothills of the Alps, Pietro Marcolina and his six brothers ventured toward better opportunity in America. In 1918, within ten years of taking port in Philadelphia, they established Marcolina Brothers, Masonry Contractors. Centered in Chestnut Hill, Marcolina Brothers has helped form and restore the classic old world style of homes in the Main Line, Rydal and Jenkintown areas. Their specialized craft has been handed down through the century to sons and apprentices, and the proud, rich quality still exists in every stone they set.

Gardens of France

June 28 - July 12, 1986

Visit France's most spectacular gardens, both intimate and grand, private and public—including Versailles, Fontainbleau, Villandry, Giverny—with prominent New York landscape architect, Terry Schnadelbach. We'll stay and dine at luxurious country inns and hotels. Travel is by deluxe motorcoach and is limited to 30 persons. Our pace is leisurely, allowing for in-depth viewing and interesting side trips along the way. For brochure, please contact:
